TAFT HAS BASELY SURRENDERED TO POLITICAL POWER OF TARIFF AIDED TRUSTS, SAYS W. R. HEARST

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—The Washington Post of Wednesday printed the following:

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

PARIS, August 22.—Two years ago I declared vigorously in defence of Mr. Taft. First, because I believed that he was being unduly and unreasonably embarrassed by the press and politicians of the country; second, because I had sincere hope of the fulfilment of his announced program, and, third, because I felt that any new President, regardless of party, should be accorded fair hearing and free opportunity for the development of his political policies.

Mr. Taft in the past two years has done many things that are distinctly good, and those things I have unreservedly praised, but he has recently done one thing so surprisingly and imposingly evil that I feel I should not, and therefore will not, withhold the severe condemnation it deserves.

The farmers of America for a long time have borne the heaviest part of the oppressive burden of tariff taxation.

The farmers have received at any time but little protection for their products, and but little advantage of any kind to compensate them for the burden of tariff taxation which they have sustained.

To secure Canadian reciprocity and to confer a general benefit upon the whole consuming public, the farmers in the country were called upon to sacrifice a considerable part of even the small measure of protection which had grudgingly been given them.

To remedy this injustice and give proper consideration and compensation to so important an element of the community, the Democratic House and the Democratic and insurgent Senate passed the farmers' free list bill.

For the further benefit of the general consuming public, Congress also passed the bill providing for reductions in the woolen schedule.

Before Mr. Taft vetoed the measures he should have considered the obligation he was under to the Democratic and insurgent majority of Congress for taking up and passing his reciprocity suggestion, which a Republican Congress had scornfully rejected.

He should have considered the essential justice and propriety of the farmers' free list and the woolen schedule bills, and he should have considered finally the sacredness of his own campaign consecration to the cause of tariff reform.

Mr. Taft should remember that he is not wholly responsible for reciprocity.

He merely proposed it, as many a man has done before him.

It was the Democratic House and the Democratic and insurgent Senate which passed the reciprocity measure and made it into law.

These bodies passed the reciprocity program with the full intention of having the tariff reform bills pass with it, and Mr. Taft played an unwise and unworthy trick, not only upon the public, but upon those of his associates in public office to whom he was under the greatest obligations when he vetoed the two tariff reform measures which Congress wanted and the country needed.

Mr. Taft was elected President as a tariff reform candidate on a tariff reform platform and upon personal pledges of tariff reduction made insistently and impressively throughout his campaign.

Mr. Taft's repudiation of his platform and his pledges occurred when he signed the outrageous Aldrich bill.

This bill not only failed to reduce the tariff in accordance with Mr. Taft's pledges and the Republican party's platform, but actually increased the tariff duties for the direct benefit of plundering interests which Mr. Aldrich was in the Senate to represent.

POSTMASTER IN LYNN ROMANCE

The third romance in as many days in Lynn today became known when it was announced that Miss Edith Simpson, the eighteen-year-old daughter of George H. Simpson, one of Lynn's most influential residents, was engaged to William F. Craig, postmaster at Lynn for the past six years, and former State Representative and senator. Mr. Craig is forty-five years old. He met the girl of his choice through her father, with whom he has been associated for many years in a political way.

Miss Simpson, who lives at her father's beautiful residence at the corner of Ocean avenue and Ocean Terrace, in the "Diamond District" in Lynn, was graduated from the Lynn High School last June. The engaged couple have been seen together at dances and on automobile trips in the past two years, but no one suspected such a thing as an engagement between them.

That she may be more in sympathy with the work of her husband-to-be and also personally that she may be nearer to him, Miss Simpson started work today in the Lynn postoffice as a clerk.

Miss Simpson is a member of all the exclusive clubs of the younger Lynn society and one of the most popular girls. Mrs. Simpson, the young woman's mother, said today: "My daughter has been keeping company with Mr. Craig for some time. As for us marrying, it cannot be in my daughter's income. When the time comes and they want to get married, they have a perfect right to. I make all I care to my daughter."

Mrs. Simpson admitted, however, that there were engaged.

Mr. Craig is a lawyer and also a student of my profession. He was appointed postmaster by President Roosevelt in 1903, and reappointed by President Taft in 1907. He also owns a State Senator.

The bridegroom's father is one of the leading agents of the Standard Oil Company, and is said to be one of the wealthiest men in Lynn. The Miss Simpson should therefore enter the postoffice as a mere clerk is causing surprise among her friends.

OPEN LIFE FIGHT FOR BEATTIE

CHESTERFIELD COUNTY COURT HOUSE, Va., Aug. 24.—The greatest struggle by the ablest lawyers of Virginia to win the life of Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., in the stake was begun in this historic old courthouse today on the first anniversary of the marriage of the defendant to Lucy Owens, of whose murder he is accused. The actual trial opened with the introduction of evidence by the State under the direction of Special Prosecutor Wendenburg.

The witnesses for the prosecution, numbering nearly sixty, were called three at a time and sworn. Judge Watson ordered each to keep away from the doors and windows of the court house. Thomas E. Owens, uncle of the slain woman, was the first witness called.

The prosecution entered a setback when it was announced that W. H. Hart, one of its witnesses, was seriously ill with typhoid fever. Mr. Wendenburg said, however, that the State had another witness who probably could furnish the same testimony.

It was at the home of Mr. Owens that Beattie and his wife were staying when they went out on the fatal ride, and it was there that he returned with the body.

Uncle Tells of Tragedy.

Mr. Owens described Beattie's return to his home with the body of his wife, and the defendant listened closely with his hand behind his ear to catch every word. He said that young Beattie appeared greatly agitated. "I heard a voice calling," he said, and recognized the voice of the accused. He came into the gate in his machine at high speed. He was crying 'Oh, God, oh, my God!' as he drove the car to the house.

"He stopped the car just under an electric light. I asked him what was the matter; he replied, 'They have killed Lucy.' I would not see Louise in the car. I rushed to the car and found her body in the front part of it. Her feet were sticking over one side of the machine."

The witness testified that with Detective Shober he had driven a split in the blood spot in the Midlothian turnpike where the body was found to death.

The witness said in reply to counsel that Beattie had stated with the intention to

BIG EXPLOSION IN NORTH ADAMS

NORTH ADAMS, Aug. 24.—The blowing out of a cylinder head of the 1200 horse-power engine in the Greylock Mills just after the 500 employes had reported for work today wrecked the engine house, fatally injured the engineer and threw the mill hands, many of them women, into a panic. Many of the women fainted and others had to be restrained from jumping from the windows in their fright. The mills had to be closed, and a damage of $10,000 was caused.

The engine house is a one-story brick structure located but a short distance from the main mill building, which is three stories in height. The engineer, E. A. Grant, had just gotten up power for starting the day's work when there was a tremendous roar and the cylinder head blew out.

The end of the engine house was torn away and a shower of bricks and wood was sent into the air and then crashing against the main building. Grant was buried against the side of the engine house. He received a disjointed hip and shoulder and internal injuries that are likely to cause his death. He was taken to the North Adams Hospital in an auto.

MISS QUIMBY'S CHUM A BRIDE

In Miss Lillian Richards of Columbus square, the chum of Gertrude Quimby, who strangely disappeared, the bride of Charles McCarthy of New York?

Her mother says she is not, that she is not married to anyone. But within a half-hour from the time that Mrs. Richards made this denial the AMERICAN received a telephone call from a young woman who said: "I am Miss Richards, or, rather, I was Miss Richards. I am married to Mr. McCarthy, but mother doesn't know it."

Later Mrs. Richards denied having seen any time the wedding story. When asked where her daughter is, so that Miss Richards might speak to her in person, Mrs. Richards told her daughter is visiting friends in Dorchester.

Between the denials by the mother and the declaration over the telephone from some one declaring herself as the bride there is considerable mystery as to whether Miss Richards is still Miss Richards or is Mrs. Charles McCarthy.

Miss Richards, to use her maiden name, is a sister of Frank Richards, who is partner with Mr. McCarthy in the brokerage firm of Richards & McCarthy, New York. Miss Richards has been living with her mother at No. 9 Columbus square, South End. She is an extremely attractive girl.

Wedded at Kennebunkport.

Today the AMERICAN heard that Miss Richards and Charles McCarthy were married at the surf house of Mrs. Richards, Port Mac, by the Rev. David Wilson, a Methodist clergyman of Kennebunkport. It was said also that Mrs. Richards objected strongly to the match.

At the Richards home today Mrs. Richards said that her daughter was not up at all. The mother denied the wedding story, but admitted that her daughter knew Mr. McCarthy. This would be quite natural, Mr. McCarthy being her brother's business partner.

Later an AMERICAN reporter went back to the Richards home and talked through the speaking tube with the person at the phone speaker, who said: "I am Miss Richards. No, I am not married, for one am I engaged."

This looked as though the wedding story was all wrong. But, in less than half an hour from the time of this second denial, the AMERICAN received a telephone call from some woman, whose voice seemed quite youthful. She said:

"I am Miss Richards. You wanted to talk to me about my wedding."

"Then you are married. That's what we wish to verify."

"Yes, I Am Married."

"Yes," answered the fair informant. "I am married. I was married last Sunday at Kennebunkport to Mr. Charles McCarthy. Mother didn't know of the marriage. I was to the house when some one broke the first time. But I don't want it known till after Mr. McCarthy and I go to New York to live. Mother is upset. I don't see how the story got out, unless one went near the house during the marriage. We are going to Colorado today now to stay for a time. Mr. McCarthy is connected by a Catholic priest, and Mr. McCarthy is of the Catholic faith."

Fortified with this information, a reporter called on Mrs. Richards again. The mother reiterated denial of the marriage, adding that her daughter is visiting friends in Dorchester.

Miss Richards, or Mrs. McCarthy, is a friend of Gertrude Quimby, the pretty Boston girl who left home and was later located in New York. She was a member of the Castleton Hunt stock company at the Majestic Theatre this summer.

The ball game between the city and State government baseball teams will be the principal feature of a long athletic program at the barracks of the Democratic City Committee at Caledonia Grove on September 9. Mayor Fitzgerald, who is recently practicing a new curve, will pitch for the City Hall team, which will be captained by Street Commissioner James A. Gallivan. Governor Foss is slated to pitch for the Beacon Hill team and one of his staff will peddle the pellets, or else James Powers will captain the "Legislatures." Clerk of Courts John Quinn of the Governor's council and Clerk of Committees John F. Dwyer will umpire the game. The line-up of the two teams is not announced.

CRAZED MAN IN AUTO TERRIFIES RESORT

GLOUCESTER, Aug. 24. James Walsh, nineteen years old, son of N. J. Walsh of Cincinnati, who is a Summer resident here, created excitement in the Summer colony at Bass Rocks and East Gloucester by driving his high-powered automobile at top speed through the streets for five hours. The mad dash was made down Hough road and across the railroad tracks to the beach, near Woodland Heights, where the car was stalled high deep in the sand, with three flats, a broken steering gear and front wheels wrecked. The young man, who seemed unable to realize his strange actions, is suffering from a nervous breakdown, his mother said.

SOCIETY GOES TO HORSE SHOW

MAGNOLIA, Mass., Aug. 24.—Society folk turned out in large numbers today at the Magnolia horse show, which opened this afternoon, the biggest event of the season on the North Shore. Beautifully gowned women attracted as much attention as the exhibit of horses.

The show was marked by perfect weather. There were four races and ten classes shown. Some of the most famous show horses in the country, all blue ribbon winners, were on exhibition.

John Hays Hammond and his party occupied two boxes. Members of the diplomatic corps, summering near here, including representatives of the German, Italian and Russian embassies, were in attendance.

The track, one-quarter mile in length, laid out on the level, gleaming sand, was in perfect condition. Along the shore were myriads of craft, from small motor boats to large ocean-going yachts, all decorated and crowded with spectators. It is estimated that 2,000 people witnessed the competitions.

The outbreak at Bryn Mawr was very soon quelled by the residents themselves, acting as a kind of civil guard, but there are ominous signs at other places that the riot fever has not passed.

MORGAN vs. MUNSTERBERG.

By MORTON BIRGE.

We learn from Berlin how the Kaiser conferred
An honor on Munsterberg, meaning one bird,
The Red Eagle order, but only—Alas!
One not of the first, but the second-rate class,
While he recently gave to one Morgan, J. P.,
An order which ranks in the first class, did he
He picked nothing second
For Morgan.

Herr Hugo is learned, more learned than most.
He's figured the why and the whence of a ghost.
He solves psychological problems with ease,
And has it all over the Morgan, J. P.'s,
Except in the matter of ducats and pull,
In which Brother Morgan is wide and all wool.
No second-class eagle
For Morgan.

No second-class chicken, this Morganly bird,
But only the best, an "A. L." and "preferred."
A second-rate eagle for you and for me,
Or even for Hugo, but not for J. P.
The Morgans come first and the Munsterbergs next,
And the sine will read good to the end of the text,
Which shows what it means
To be Morgan.

MRS. WILSON AIDS GOVERNOR

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 24.—Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of Governor Wilson of New Jersey, accompanied by her married daughters, Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson, is today on a tour of the State institutions of the feeble minded. The party is being made by automobile, covering a period of more than a week. The tour began with the guests of Mrs. A. Reeve Ballantine of Hoboken, who is on the board of managers of several State institutions.

At the Summer home of the chief executive of New Jersey and his family, Mrs. Wilson told of her part in the new administration, so far as Governor Wilson's affairs are concerned, but she has accompanying her husband on his trips of inspection she can gain information that will materially assist him in his work as Governor.

"I feel that the successful wife is one who meets her husband on every mark," said Mrs. Wilson. "No one girl from the fraternal compliment as well as his companion. Now that we are in the governor I can devote more time and energy than I could in years gone by.

"This trip with the Governor is one that particularly interests me, for there is so much being done in our various institutions to correct mental and physical infirmities, and I believe every one should keep in touch with such work. My daughter Jessie, who goes with me, is assisting if I may say that word, in settlement work.

"Nothing pleases me so much as to see my daughters show an interest in the public welfare.

"You see their father is what I call a practical idealist, and his constructive ideality has been imparted in great measure to my three daughters."

Asked if she would rather have her daughters follow a "career" or get married, Mrs. Wilson said:

"Why, every mother wants her daughter to marry, but the time has gone when a mother wants to push her girls from the cobbler seat, the private citizen. They are marrying less early than formerly, and makes for better family life, I believe.

"Where the insurrections of the heart are born that wreck and rend the souls of men is more or less unguessed—we simply do not know," says Elbert Hubbard in his article on Jefferson in Saturday's AMERICAN.

SEARCH ON FOR EDISON'S WIFE

DETROIT, Aug. 24.—Officials of the Michigan Central Railroad to-day called to Thomas A. Edison, the inventor, now in Paris, that they are unable to locate Mrs. Edison, whose whereabout are surrounded by mystery. The railroad men fear some thing has happened to Mrs. Edison, and they notified the inventor to that effect.

Shortly after her husband sailed for Paris on his first vacation in many years, Mrs. Edison started for the Pacific Coast. She left her traveling address with Assistant General Passenger Agent Huston of the Michigan Central road, with the request that he forward mail to her. This he agreed to do.

Mr. Huston received considerable mail addressed to Mrs. Edison, and started forwarding evidently from her husband, and he forwarded this to the address she had given him. A few days ago the mail in Detroit began to return to the company's office, marked "Not here." Officials of the railroads along the Pacific Coast have been requested to aid in the search for Mrs. Edison, and it is probable that the police will also be called in if efforts to locate her prove unsuccessful.

GRANGERS DEPLORE SNUB TO PRESIDENT

HARTFORD, Aug. 24.—Washington Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Washington, Ct., has passed resolutions rescinding those who presumed to represent it, in order in this State in their attitude toward President Taft in connection with his recent trip to the Connecticut Fair at Charter Oak Park, when they decided to keep Grange duty at the fair. The resolutions declare the action of the officials of the Connecticut State Grange to be note of gross and unwarranted discourtesy to the chief executive.

All Along of a Him

Her face was round, her hands were slim, her figure was dainty and fine, and she and she fed and fit all the summer she sat, sans she fed and fit the neighbors say. It was all along of a him. But we know she was upset by the evangelistic meetings that were held in the tabernacle last year, and by having friendly visits from Evangelist Wilson Bess, ornery 19 skilled watchmakers and enjoy the highest possible grade for interest and not low prices. A safe place to save your eyes tested, 3 high-class salesmen, 4 cases repaired while you wait; their only store, open evenings.

How to "Shed" a Bad Complexion

It's foolish to attempt to cover up or hide a sallow complexion, when you can so easily remove the sallowness or the complexion itself. Rouge and the like on a brownish skin only emphasize the defect. The better way is to apply pure mercolized wax—the same as you would cold cream—putting it on at night, removing it in the morning with warm water and soap, following with a dash of cold water. The effect of a few applications is simply marvelous. The half-dead cuticle is absorbed by the wax—painlessly, gradually, in tiny imperceptible particles—revealing the beautiful velvety white new skin beneath.

No woman need have a sallow, blotchy pimply or freckled complexion if she'll just go to the druggist's, get some good mercolized wax and use as suggested.

"DAFFYDIL" HABIT HAS GOT NEW ENGLAND GOING; WATCH SUNDAY AMERICAN

Make arrangements now and organize your daffydil reading party for next Sunday.

Three hundred and eighteen of this week's prize-winning daffydils will be printed in Sunday's AMERICAN, together with a list of the prizes to which the winners are entitled.

The "Daffydil Habit" is getting to be the Sunday's real old popular among all classes, conditions, races and creeds. Those who contribute to the "daffydil habit" furnish one hour of solid fun and laughter for all AMERICAN readers in the Sunday morning section of the prize-winning daffydils.

Have YOU sent in YOUR daffydil?

If not, get to the game and enjoy your Sunday.

It is not a requirement of the contest that those who contribute should be ugly. Just imagine yourself "daffy" and join with New England in this fascinating Summer diversion.

By the way, don't forget to order next Sunday's AMERICAN in advance, because the demand is enormous, and you are bound to be disappointed if your newsdealer does not save you a copy.

Here They Are.

Here are some of the daffydils received to-day:

If a musician doesn't know his notes, does a piano. Clarence W. Fox, 163 Parkview avenue, Bangor, Maine.

If a couple of Boston detectives could track three crooks to Russia, what could a pinkerd track do? Clara Krohnson, 178 Holden street, Providence, R. I.

If the captain sat the anchor on the ranch, would it belaying pins. Miss Betty Crechan, Wisconsin, Maine.

If Rose Pilsooff can swim to Coney Island, why can't Biddeford, Me., York, 200 Allerton, Mass.

If it takes 15c to fill a can, what will it take to Philadelphia Phan? H. Hawn, 10 1 street, So. Boston, Mass.

If Revere Beach blew up where would Wonderland?—William Heath, No. 502 Summer street, East Boston.

If a woman was dying for the want of food, would her corset steel? Charles A. Pinkes, No. 612 Westminster street, Providence, R. I.

If Collier dislikes game nuts is that any reason why Astor should die for force—? H. George Nadina, N. H. box 444.

If Thelma is on fire, will Woburn?—Edward F. Doyle, No. 27 Damon street, Hyde Park, Mass.

If Detroit was willing to sell Ty Cobb, would Cornwall disturb it.—T. Fogarty, No. 83 Quincy street, Dorchester, Mass.

Heed the Rules.

The rules of the Daffydil contest are as follows: Mail your daffydils to the Daffydil Editor, Boston AMERICAN, P. O. Box 2087, Boston, Mass.

Write on one side of the paper only. Sign your full name and address.

AUTOIST HELD FOR DEATH OF WOMAN

FITCHBURG, August 24.—Charged with causing the death of Miss Catherine Ryan of Worcester on the night of June 4, Joel F. Quirk, a carriage dealer of Westminster, was arraigned this morning in the Superior Court to-day.

The case was continued to September 5 on the plea by counsel for Quirk that he was in the hospital suffering with a broken leg when Miss Ryan was a member. In his autobile from a dinner party at the Worcester Agricultural Club. While the party was driving through Shrewsbury the machine ran into a telegraph pole. Miss Ryan was thrown against the pole.

FAST WORK TEST AT U. S. ARSENAL

An investigation into the Taylor system in the ordnance department in the Watertown arsenal which is being conducted by Colonel Thomas H. Rees, has been under the twenty-four months' operating test and effort employes of the machine shops shops would show them which is the right and wrong way of doing things, the latter of the system is thought to be the best. After getting results the men returned to work on the machines, Thompson left Watertown and went to the War Department.

MAN INDICTED AS HABITUAL CRIMINAL

FITCHBURG, Aug. 24.—In the superior Court to-day Frank Bessey, Gardner, was indicted by the grand jury as a habitual criminal. His case was continued. Bessey was arrested on the night of May 29 by Chief L. Mott and officer William Dolan of Winchendon. Several days later Bessey was arrested there, when they visited his home to search for stolen goods. He was given a commission of several offices in Worcester.

FLIERS PRAISE SQUANTUM FIELD

There was an angry crowd of aviation enthusiasts on the field at the Squantum to-day. They berated the railroads and lurk in general. The visitors were angered by a delegation of Rev. Beachey, W. G. Beatty, Aeronaut Ely, James V. Martin and Graham-White, all of these all but Graham-White arrived at the field in time to see the start of the aviation meet. Graham-White arrived at Chicago where they have been flying for over a week.

And the complaint is this: After the Chicago meet it was found that all the machines were in such condition that they would be overhauled and repaired. It would not be safe to use them in the Harvard meet. All the way East, on the private cars, they worked on special train and between runs on the machines, and when they arrived at the field it was expected that the machines could be moved out to the field and put in shape for the meet in a day for work. But something went wrong, for the machines did not reach the field at Squantum till noon.

Work at Top Speed.

It will be necessary to work at top speed to-day in order to get the machines in shape for the meet, which opens at 10 o'clock Saturday morning. Night work is on the card and the mechanicians grudge the time lost to-day.

The aviators who arrived to-day from Chicago are enthusiastic in their praise of the Squantum field. They compare it to the flying arrangements below the landing piers in San Francisco Bay, and declare that Squantum "has it on the Windy City" for facilities.

The aviation field was a busy place to-day, with Grahame-White's machine assembled, including his Newport monoplane and the machines just arrived from Chicago. Beachey also getting their machines in shape for practice spins. A number of visitors were expected this afternoon. The hangars were rapidly filling up, and everything pointed to an intensely interesting meet, the starting up of several records.

Great interest was manifested when it was learned that Atwood was likely to try to fly the meet over the ocean to-day.

Welcome to Atwood.

The welcome which is planned for Atwood Saturday will be unparalleled in this country, for besides a reception after his arrival on the field, there will be parades and city and State officials, and the presidentation of a certificate from the governor of Massachusetts. Many of the prominent men will be present at the meet, and it is expected that twenty or more miles from the field, will be met by a delegation of athletes, who will fly in their machines from the field and escort him to the getaway. He will be the first committee—at least in America—to ever meet a man in airship and fly with him to his destination.

Tom Sopwith, the famous English aviator, is also here. He is a splendid type of young Englishman, light haired, smooth-faced young man of twenty-two, who looks as if he were more at home on the green. He is 5 feet 3 inches tall, but he does not look if in street clothes.

"You're going to make us fly for our money, here," said Sopwith after a hasty glance over the program. "I see that everything came very easily. Beachey was undoubtedly the favorite in the betting, and the chances he takes make one's blood curdle. I believe I'll be the most successful. Every event will be exciting."

Manager Claflin is still in communication with Miss Harriet Quimby, the only just licensed aviatress, and with Rene Simon. The Paris French aviator who starts in the air in the South this Spring is also expected to enter the meet, as he is probable entries. Miss Quimby is waiting only the announcement of a special prize for women.

WHITE TO AID GRAND TRUNK

Representative Norman H. White of Brookline has been appointed by the Master Luther Association whom he addressed them at their outing in Lowell to-day that if he becomes Governor he would do all in his power to open the port of Boston to the Grand Trunk Railroad. He said:

"If the Grand Trunk enters Boston it will benefit the whole State. It will increase our imports and exports and will provide better opportunities for labor. It will give us increased and improved transportation facilities. Furthermore, it will provide us with reasonable competition in transportation.

"The public is entitled to this. It is only by such competition that our industries can be properly developed."

MAY FILL FIRE BOARD TO-DAY

Mayor Fitzgerald will to-day call upon the Boston Elevated Railroads to select a man to represent them on the new commission appointed to investigate the needs of the various fire departments. Four members of the board, Francis M. Carroll, John W. Decrow, William E. O'Brien and Charles H. Blackall have been selected by the Mayor, who has now only to appoint the Underwriter's representative to complete the commission.

Francis M. Carroll, a former acting fire commissioner and a lawyer, represents the city on the commission; Mr. O'Brien is president of the Boston Central Labor Union; John W. Decrow is a lawyer and represents the United Improvement Association, and Clarence H. Blackall, who is an architect, represents the Chamber of Commerce.

He was the author of many books on chemistry and allied subjects.

PADEREWSKI'S HEN FARM GONE

MORGES, Switzerland, Aug. 24.—Fire destroyed the buildings on Ignace Paderewski's chicken farm here. The celebrated pianist is described as watching the direction by the flames with a philosophic calm unsuspected in one possessing the artistic temperament. One explanation of this is that Mme. Paderewski has the greater financial interest in the place.

The most recent census gave 5,000 as the number in the Paderewski flocks of highly bred poultry. Fanciers were sometimes startled three years ago when Mme. Paderewski paid a record price of $7,500 for a rooster and three hens to Ernest Kellerstrauss, a Kansas City breeder. They were blue-blooded elephants. The hens were christened Lady Helen, Victoria and Cleopatra, but the rooster was unnamed at the time of his expectation.

There was some delay in the shipment caused by difficulty in Mme. Paderewski finding what sort of crate was suitable for romance, but finally she secured a policy for $2,000, the four fowls were taken to an ordinary crate and sailed away. Mme. Paderewski and her husband followed two months later, madame carrying a basket of American eggs.

With her American purchases she won a gold cup, the principal prize at the Lausanne poultry show. She entered her exhibits as Paderewski-Orlopinska.

While in this country Mme. Paderewski offered $5,000 for a chicken famous among fanciers and was somewhat piqued because her offer was declined.

TAFT ARRIVES AT BEVERLY

President Taft arrived at his Summer home, "Paramatta" in Beverly, at 10:55 a. m. to-day. He was accompanied by Secretary Hilles, and Major Archibald Butt. The Taft smile was in evidence, and it was clear that the trip from Rochester, N. Y. and the attacks on the Wood Bill were weren't preying on the presidential mind.

Immediately after lunch, President Taft motored to the Myopia Hunt Club for an afternoon of golf. Later in the day he will spend a time time on the preparation of the speech which he will deliver Saturday at a dinner of Congressman Augustus P. Gardner in Hamilton, Mass., which that town's County Republican Club meets there. The executive offices were opened to-day and the different "summer capital" clerks started to work.

President Taft was greeted on a crowd of 200 cheering citizens when he arrived in Boston at South Station at 9:17 a. m. He motored past the Parker House where Mr. Taft was awaiting his arrival.

The run to Beverly was made through Cambridge, Everett, Chelsea, Revere, Lynn and Swampscott.

He will remain in Beverly about three weeks before he leaves on his trip on the Pacific coast, returning in Washington the last of October.

UPTON SINCLAIR ACCUSING WIFE

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—Upton Sinclair's romance is shattered. Only a few of his friends have been in the secret that the married life of the author of "The Jungle" has not been of the happiest. The fact that he was to sue for divorce, naming Harry Kemp, a young poet from Lawrence, Kans., was a great surprise to his literary friends in this city. Sinclair's authorized statement, however, leaves no doubt about the matter.

Sinclair's announcement that he has had a long letter from his wife, who was Miss Meta Fuller when he married her in 1900, in which she declares her preference for the stage and says that the young poet is also to seek historical fame, sets forth his side of the case. Nothing has been heard from Mrs. Sinclair or the Kansas poet by their friends here.

It was in 1900, while writing "Spring time and Harvest," in a hut in the Verapont woods, that Sinclair met Miss Fuller. She was the daughter of William Fuller, a clerk of the Special Sessions Court, and was spending a vacation in Vermont with her parents. In those days, before success had come to him, Sinclair had none too much to eat. The Fullers, who were staying near his hut, fell into the habit of bringing him dainty meals and staying to chat while he rested from his writing.

Fell in Love in Wilds.

During these visits the young couple fell in love, and when Sinclair returned to New York, his book finished, they were betrothed. Mr. Fuller liked the young author, but urged him that it would be better to win more success before marrying.

The Fullers also objected to Sinclair's views that a marriage by a minister was undecorous, a view that was upheld by Miss Fuller, who heartily agreed with many of the author's Utopian ideas that were eventually to make him known throughout the country. In October of 1900 they were married, yielding to the wishes of the bride's parents and having the ceremony performed by the Rev. Minot J. Savage. Sinclair wore a bicycle suit and a sweater.

Soon after the wedding Sinclair and his bride went into the St. Lawrence country and lived in romantic fashion by a tent. There Mrs. Sinclair's father found them while they were sailing from Thousand Island to the mainland and induced them to return to New York. All of this time the couple had little money and literally lived from hand to mouth. Sinclair was working on his new book, with sublime faith in its success and spurred on by his wife.

He had difficulty in finding a publisher and probably did not make over $500 in two years, but he was an incessant writer and had been ever since he could his way through Columbia by writing dime novels, war stories and short sketches. It was when he came out with "The Jungle" that Sinclair won real recognition and reward.

Established Socialist Colony.

Sinclair was next heard from when he established Helicon Hall, a communistic colony, which started with a flourish for the advocacy and elaboration of the author's socialistic ideas. Mrs. Sinclair took an active interest in the colony and with the advent of a number of literary people it made a good start toward the goals aimed at. It had not been founded long, however, when the main building was destroyed by fire and Sinclair and several other persons were injured in jumping from the windows. Mrs. Sinclair among them.

The author began to way wealthy with the royalties on "The Jungle," an expose of packing house conditions and life in Chicago that stirred the country. Recently he founded another colony, this time at Arden, in Delaware. Dissensions with a single leader in the colony soon broke out and Sinclair and eighteen others were arrested recently on a charge of playing tennis on Sunday.

Rather than pay a fine Sinclair went to jail. While spending his eighteen days there, Sinclair wrote a poem "The Algerine." He also bitterly criticised the jail officials, charging that the prisoners were living under terrible conditions.

Some two years ago rumors began to be heard that the Sinclairs were not agreeing well, but the authors openly made denial of this. So far as was known by most of their friends here, the Sinclairs and their young child were dwelling in peace at Arden, with much charming social life in the open to keep them amused.

Sinclair's statement of his marital troubles was as follows:

A STATEMENT FROM UPTON SINCLAIR.

As soon as I can get into touch with my lawyer and have the necessary papers prepared, it is my intention to enter suit against my wife, Meta F. Sinclair, for divorce, naming as co-respondent Harry Kemp. I wish to make the following statement of facts regarding the matter:

Harry Kemp, a young poet, from Lawrence, Kan., came to visit me at my Summer home at Arden, Del., about a month ago. He was an intimate friend of mine, and I for a long time tried to find a publisher for his work, which I considered the most significant that has been produced by any modern American poet. He had previously met my wife when she was in a sanitarium at Battle Creek, Mich.

At the home there quickly sprang up an intimacy to which I found reason to object.

The result of my protests was that my wife left for New York, declaring it her intention to go on the stage and be independent. Three days later Harry Kemp followed, declaring that he also was going on the stage. They went to the apartment of my wife's father-in-law, who is out of town. My mother-in-law was sent down to Arden.

I then came to New York in an effort to protect my wife from Kemp. He protested that their relationship was innocent, but I knew that this was untrue, and I insisted that they leave. The result was that I received this morning a long letter from my wife, in the course of which she declared her intentions to stay with Harry and ultimately to go on the stage.

I make this statement because I have just learned the worst of it. My intention has reached one newspaper and I would rather the real facts were printed than anybody's conjectures. I have nothing to add to the statement and I respectfully ask to be spared requests for interviews.

We called an important French banking interest concerning the international situation and inquired which has been in advance of the warnings of the seriousness of the situation—and have this morning the following reply:

"Moroccan affairs are improving."

LONDON, Aug. 24.—Assurances that Moroccan situation is very important now origination in opposition to the Franco-Germany powers in the Algeciras treaty will approve the proposals in France for establishment of a protectorate in Morocco in exchange for various concessions to be made to Germany. The limit of these concessions will be determined by the French cabinet.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—The government today is estimating the effect upon the French people of its reply to the demands of Germany on the Congo question. It is feared that should the people resent the reply formulated as a victory for diplomacy, the cabinet might be forced to resign.

FRANCE STIRRED BY THE ULTIMATUM GIVEN TO GERMANY

The New York Times of today prints the following special cable dispatch from its correspondent in Paris:

PARIS, Aug. 23.—The semi-official note issued last night, which ended with a statement sounding very much like an ultimatum, points to a satisfactory settlement of the present deadlock will be reached only if France regards Morocco as so definitely hers that then is finally settled without fear of any future controversy, and, secondly, if Germany reduces her claims regarding the cession of her territory in the Congo "claims which still seem obviously excessive," has added to the fear lest that war is threatened.

The scenery surrounding the whole of the French-German controversy has been regarded as sombre, and it is felt on all sides that the country is very near to war. The announcement that the great army manoeuvres in September are to be curtailed, one corps taking part in them instead of two "on account of the hot and dusty weather now prevalent among French cattle," is regarded as highly significant.

The French public is even more skeptical regarding the pretext offered by the British Government of a water shortage for the total abandonment of the manoeuvres this year. Both statements are considered to be mere excuses to hide the fact that the armies are being kept ready for instant action.

Throughout the country the addresses of deputies and senators of the General Councils of the various departments have been filled with the greatest bitterness, until a note of extreme gravity, and urge the necessity of firmness.

A similar sound is taken by the press, only its tone is still more emphatic. All the newspapers declare that the country does not intend to stand continued annoyance and humiliation from Germany, and that it is time that her claims as to colonies are settled once and for all. This attitude of the press and political leaders is endorsed by the public, and not even the capital broods the hush of impatient suspense.

In political circles the semi-official communique mentioned in the foregoing is regarded as the French government's last word, and the whole country seems resolute in the decision not to suffer material territorial losses, whatever the cost may be.

OPPOSES CRAMMING MINDS OF PUPILS

The Rev. Robert Swickerath, S. J., addressed the teachers of the Parochial school of the Boston district at the institute held in Boston College Hall today. His subject was "How to train the mind." Father Swickerath condemned the method of cramming the child with knowledge. "With one exception, nothing should be taught a child unless the subject is somewhat understood," he said. "That exception applies to rules of devotion and politeness. Never give the catechism or Bible history to a child for punishment, as that kind of punishment creates aversion to the form of punishment administered."

ATWOOD MAKES NEW WORLD AIR RECORD IN FLIGHT TO SEA

wood sweet down the Hudson Valley to West Point reaching there at 9:30, but he stead of landing as he had intended he circled over the parade grounds of the United States military academy. Then doubled on his trail three miles back on the course to a field near Cold Spring which offered splendid landing opportunities. At Cold Spring Atwood made a stop of forty-two minutes in traversing the eighty-six miles, making an average speed of forty-two miles an hour. Cold Spring is fifty-three miles from New York.

Smashes All Records.

When Atwood reached Cold Spring he had broken the world's cross country record of 1,164 miles made in Germany by forty-eight miles, he having covered 1,212 miles. At West Point he circled again for the parade ground, and the military academy was thrown into excitement by the sight of an aeroplane, the first that ever soared over the institution.

Atwood's journey down the Hudson Valley was marked by spectacular features. At Cruggsneck he dipped low to enjoy the rising greeting from the people on the great bridge which spans the Hudson at that point.

Atwood kept close to the water to avoid the treacherous pockets encountered at the heights of the Catskills. At Hurley he was forced to rise to clear the tops of three dangerous cables, not a great, since nearly caused by striking the top wire when he descend 200 feet.

Upon into metric spring Atwood was travelling very slowly. West Point he no doubt was glad to see the end of his journey on the other side. On nearing West Point he circled again over the parade ground, crossing the Hudson. His landing was made on a farm just north of the academy. He said he would resume his flight after repairing the slight damage to the skid should skids.

Various items along the route greeted the aviator with shrieking sirens and whistles. At some points below the metropolis he was so low in the air that the cheers of the people rang in the ears of the aviator. Atwood's course down the Hudson Valley from Albany to New York is 135 miles.

Atwood said his first stop would be West Point, eighty-three miles away, providing the gasoline held out and the weather remained favorable.

Another condition was perfect, as though a fight have been about the Hudson Valley. There was a light northerly wind, but the young aviator said it was not strong enough to hinder speedy progress.

Atwood was up early and had his aeroplane assembled and his fuel tanks filled by 7 o'clock.

He made his first start at 7:30, but broke a spark plug and had to tarry until this break was remedied. An automobile was sent and motored out to see the start supplied a spark plug, but it did not fit. Another plug was substituted and Atwood finally arose at 7:38.

Big Crowd Sees Start.

A big crowd had made its way out to the Hoffman farm from which the start was made. Some went by foot, others by motor and country folk from the adjacent country places came either by wagon to see the birdman wind his way out on the home stretch of his journey.

The broad acres of the Hoffmans and adjoining farms were dotted with automobiles. Comfortable people had made it a gala occasion. Many had brought their lunches, prepared to spend the day if the aviator was held up.

This is a great day for flying, said Atwood, as he reached the farm. I believe I will be able to make West Point without difficulty. The wind is not strong and there is no danger of losing my way, as I can follow the railroad into New York. This also detracts from the morning for it should fall a drop into the water would not be an unusual thing. Anyhow my machine is equipped with pontoons. I am glad my long trip will be made in a calm although if it were longer I have no fear that I could not keep up. Anyhow I do make it successful.

The aeroplane was constructed of aluminum to lessen their weight in the machine. It was brought from Albany to Hoffmans, where Atwood had originally intended to attack the flight. Supplies had been fastened onto the sides so that the machine could be taken into New York. This also detracts from the morning for it should fall a drop into the water would not be an unusual thing. Made a Perfect Start.

The aviator sped the early part of last night in safety, the start of Buffalo, Ten Eyck. He was dined at the Fort Orange Club, returning here at midnight. Some of those who had automobiles tried to follow along the country roads, keeping in sight of the new craft, but they soon dis-tanced. The aviator's start was perfect for, moment he arose on the Hoffman farm and his motor worked without a hitch.

Rose in Graceful Circles.

He rose in graceful circles, passing over a half mile toward the east, then veering toward the starting point as though he intended to land. As the machine circled over the house the crowd gave another round of cheers went up. Atwood had stopped his engine, and was not brought into the journey proper. Then the motor resumed and he was off on his way.

Seven hundred and thirty-two miles of his trip by the time he reached Albany, he said. His actual flying time up to that point was twenty-five hours and eight minutes, he said.

He also had to make a stop at Albany for gasoline. His supplies of fuel in the machine and gave the word to let her go.

ATWOOD'S LONG FLIGHT TO THE SEA

By ARNOLD KRUCKMAN.

CASTLETON, N. Y., Aug. 24.—Harry N. Atwood, who will fly from coast to coast for the $50,000 William Randolph Hearst prize, winged his way yesterday sixty-six miles across New York state, from Albany to Castleton-on-the-Hudson, in the ordinary flight from St. Louis, which ended just eleven days ago. How he managed to fly all of yesterday in a pouring rain, overy and nerve-wrecked persons who have been following his aerial progress half across the continent.

Not only were if the elements a fair future against him, but his biplane gave way under the terrific strain which was placed upon it. Twice he was forced to descend upon the twenty-five-mile journey which he had been flying for eleven days. Though he had not slept more than four hours since Saturday night, he rose in the morning as fresh and keen as if he were just beginning his special flight.

The sixty-six miles which he covered between Fort Plain and this place makes the distance since leaving St. Louis 1,119 miles, just thirteen miles less than the world's cross country record, achieved in Germany on a flight lasting thirty days. Atwood had only one big trip of seventy-two days and actually in the air, including his eighty flights of from a few minutes, only twenty-five hours, eight minutes.

In the practically equalled the world's record in a shorter time than he used to establish it.

Amazing Speed in Air.

If it had not been for the exhaustion of his motor, the young Napoleon of aviation undoubtedly would have exceeded his today the world's record for cross country flights by at least thirty miles. At the amazing rate he has been flying, he could traverse the Atlantic continent in the total for the coveted prize in exactly five days.

Last night Atwood's devoted mechanicians, Frank Lawson and John Ganzi, worked feverishly under his direction on the hill of Frank Hoffman's farm, a mile and a half south of here, by the glare of five lanterns like acetylene lamps.

Scarcely any seasoned mariners believed that he could start again at all to-day. But the motorcycle racing man from Boston has performed such wonders in feats of endurance and persistence in avia-tion that no one was willing to assert it is impossible for him to reach New York to-day.

So one believed that he would start from Fort Plain yesterday morning the townspeople had celebrated the unique evening until the small hours of the morning, breaking up only in time for a late night after a dance.

He had slept only an hour during the previous twenty-four, but this did not deter him from rising at 5 o'clock. His mechanicians, worn and sick from their harassing labors of the ten days, were quite unfit to be tapped on the hill behind Dysert's farm to get ready for his flight.

The sky was sodmonly lowering, black with wind and threatening rain. Furthermore, his faithful motor had given fatal indications yesterday that it needed a rest.

In spite of all drawbacks, Atwood sparred up early one to make the necessary preparations. At 7 o'clock the word flashed around the village that he was ready to go. Farmers in rusty carryalls, with their families, pedestrians and automobile parties and camped on the surrounding hillside during the night so as to be sure to see the start.

In the presence of most of the population for miles around, Atwood made his start just as the first shots brought a shower. At 7:25 a. m. to the accompaniment of a tremendous cheer from the crowd, the shrieking of automobile horns, coarse bootleg of the factory whistles and clanging of the fire and church bells, he soared away over the Mohawk Valley, skirting along over the picturesque village and low hills that form the spurs of the Adirondacks.

Society Women Use New Wrinkle Remover

(From Society World)

Since the discovery that a solution of ordinary saxolite and witch hazel has a peculiar effect upon wrinkled skins, it has been learned that many prominent society women all over the country have used this simple home treatment with great success. The formula: An powdered saxolite, one ounce, dissolved in witch hazel, one half pint. Use daily as a wash lotion.

The beneficial action of this wash is felt at once. There's an agreeable, refreshing sensation and feeling of exhilaration. The skin soon becomes firmer and more youthful looking, flabbiness and all wrinkles are immediately affected. No one need hesitate to get the ingredients at the drug store and make the remedy herself, for there are no harmful effects whatever.

FIVE WHITTIER SUSPECTS HELD

Joseph Cuneo and Edward F. Gleason the two latest men arrested in connection with the Whittier murder mystery, were arraigned in court today and held in $2,000 each on charge of manslaughter.

They were arrested yesterday, following the arrest and arraignment of three other men.

Joseph Cuneo is twenty-seven years old and lives at No. 176 Hanover street. Edward F. Gleason, twenty-one years, lives on Endicott street and is driver of an express wagon.

Gleason is charged with assault and battery upon George Parwell, one of the two men who was with Lieutenant Frank A. Whittier and Engineer Henry Hoehn of the U. S. steamer cutter Androscoggin last Saturday night, when Lieutenant Whittier was killed.

His arrest resulted from information given the police by three men who are said to have been eyewitnesses of the fight between the Whittier party and a gang of men on the shore of North End.

Gleason denied forcibly that he had any connection with the affray. He retained a lawyer and demanded a hearing in court as soon as possible.

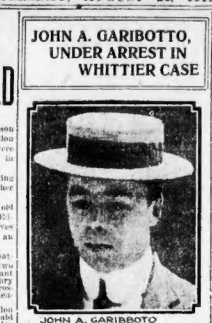
Prisoners Protest Innocence.

Joseph Cuneo's arrest followed that of Gleason. He was charged with assault, like Gleason, but made emphatic denial of the police charge.

The police have arrested five men so far. The first three taken yesterday are Frank Cuneo, twenty-seven years, of Ferry street; Giuseppi Balsarotti, seventy-seven years, no address, and John Garibotti of No. 2 Hull street, a fish dealer. These three were brought into court yesterday and were held in $2,000 bonds for a continued hearing on August 30 on charges of assault and of manslaughter in connection with Lieutenant Whittier's death.

It was said that Cassassa, Balsarotti and Garibotti might be brought into court today as witnesses, in case the counsel for Cuneo and Gleason desired. What the evidents were arraigned to-day, that the police thought new evidence has the regular police witnesses already in hand.

JOHN A. GARIBOTTO, UNDER ARREST IN WHITTIER CASE



JOHN A. GARIBBOTO

After investigation the police believe no weapon was used upon Whittier. Although the assailants numbered five and the party from the revenue cutter four, the residents of the North End average of each small stature, in comparison with the weight and height of Lieutenant Whittier and his companions, that the police are at loss to understand how the five assailants so quickly put to rout the other men, leaving Whittier dying on the pavement.

A careful scrutiny of the medical examiner's report of the wounds upon the body of Lieutenant Whittier which resulted in his death leaves the police still in a quandary as to just how Lieutenant Whittier met his death, whether from the blow struck by one of the attacking Italians or from striking the pavement with his head. The police are inclined to accept the latter theory.

The police of the Hanover street station continued to-day a canvass of the North End for people who might have witnessed the fight.

In a case where the residents could not speak English an interpreter was used. The police think that the other men wanted by them are still in Boston and that before long assembly will be found who can give their names.

L STOCKHOLDERS ACCEPT MERGER

Boston Elevated road stockholders at a meeting held at noon to-day in Wesleyan Hall formally voted to accept the terms of the act passed by the 1911 Legislature for consolidation of that railway and the West End. There was a surprise furnished by Attorney H. Hesseltine Newton, voting by proxy for Miss Helen L. Hunneman, and representing her shares, when he cast thirty-two votes against it.

The total number of shares voted on was 107,584. For the merger were 107,552. Against it were 32. The number of votes needed to accept the consolidation act was 53,792.

President Bancroft of the Boston Elevated called the meeting to order at noon, and said that directors recommended consolidation on the proposed terms. There were present, in person or by proxy. There are 109,500 shares of Boston Elevated stock outstanding. More than half of them were represented.

H. H. Wilson recommended acceptance of the consolidation act. He was immediately followed by Attorney Newton, who spoke for Miss Hunneman and in opposition. He said he considered the act to be unconstitutional, illegal and void. Mr. Wilson moved for a ballot. Balloting began at 12:05 and the vote was announced at 12:20. It had been expected that the vote for consolidation would be unanimous.

The West End stockholders will meet to vote on the proposition on September 6. They will get 7 per cent. interest on their stock, the same rate as was paid by the Boston Elevated under the lease. Many Boston Elevated stockholders have bitterly opposed consolidation upon the proposed terms.

MRS. JULIA GERAGHTY TELLS OF HER PLANS FOR A HAPPY FUTURE

The AMERICAN to-day publishes the seventh and concluding chapter of Mrs. Julia French Geraghty's charming life story. Mrs. Geraghty, before her elopement surrounded by every luxury that vast wealth could supply, with her every wish anticipated by an army of domestics, relates how she is learning to do housework—to cook, to sew, to make beds. Mrs. Geraghty concludes her fascinating narrative with a description of the future plans of herself and her Jack.

MRS. GERAGHTY'S LIFE STORY.

By JULIA FRENCH GERAGHTY.

CHAPTER VII.

Our Future.

Now I come to the preparations for our future. I have already begun my training as a housekeeper. Jack's cousin, Evelyn is my teacher. He is a perfect dear. She is sixteen years old and the most popular child. There is a string of beaux around all the time, and I am forever being introduced to them, and then I can't remember which ones I have met and which I haven't, and I am so afraid of not bowing to the ones I have met, and their thinking me snobbish, that I just bow to everybody, including, I suppose, a lot of young men I haven't met. I suppose they think I am crazy and let it go at that.

The very first day I was here I helped set the table and get the dinner, and the next morning I rolled up my sleeves and Evelyn gave me a regular lesson in housekeeping. I made the beds and washed dishes and dusted around and helped with some of the cooking. I am going to cook a whole meal just as soon as they think it is safe and are willing to trust themselves to my hands. Though I don't know but it would be better to wait until Jack and I were alone in our own little home. It would be better to risk killing off Jack the two or three times we try first attempts at cooking than a whole family.

I've got to learn how to sew, too. My maid did my mending and I never even cared about doing embroidery, but it won't be any harder to learn than housework, and I just love what I have had a chance to do.

It's wonderful what a difference it makes if you are doing things for a person you love. I can't imagine any greater happiness than just settling down in some pretty little cottage and keeping house for my Jack. I wouldn't have even one servant because I should wish to do every thing myself.

Would Like Home in Newport.

I think it would be fine to settle down in Newport because it such a pretty place and Jack has a lot of friends, and it is a fine business there. The stories about his being a mere chauffeur are absurd. He is an experienced demonstrator, and has a machine shop connected with the garage in which he works.

But I haven't a word to say about where we will make our home. I want that entirely to Jack, because he knows what he likes, and whatever he likes will be most to his interest to settle, and I am so happy and free to be loved, I am just with him.

I don't care where it is, but I love to dream about the little home we are going to have. It will be small, and easy to take care of, and very simply furnished. We are going to have a nice piano, because we are both fond of music, and Jack sings very well. I can play, and all this is mere business, but rug time and cutlery times.

Then, of course, we will rise above the use of automobiles as long as Jack is in that business, and if we go down to Newport, I should love to have one of those speedy automobile boats.

A Home in New Hampshire.

If everything turns out all right with my family, it will be great fun to go up to my little house on the family place in Chester, of course it will be my own house, and we can go there or do anything we like with it, but the houses are all so close together that it would not be very pleasant unless we were all on good terms.

But I love Chester so, and the life up New Hampshire, that I can't imagine anything more fun than going up there for a vacation and having Jack in my own little home.

I'll be glad when all our plans are settled and we know just what we are going to do and where we are going to live, and where there aren't any more surprises or uncertainties in front of us. But any way, I know we are bound to be happy, for we love each other dearly and we have everything in common. All the things Jack likes I like, his interests are mine, and mine his.

I am very glad to put myself completely in his hands, because I believe in a man's running his household, and I think when a woman marries a man she should trust him enough to be willing to let him take charge of things.

I have no regrets for the step I have taken. Whatever comes, Jack and I are legally and permanently married, nothing can separate us, and I know I can look over the future holds for us, it is bound to be a happy future, because we really love each other.

(The End.)

STOLEN PICTURE UPSETS FRANCE

PARIS, Aug. 23.—Though the Louvre and all Paris have been thoroughly searched, no trace of the missing Mona Lisa, Leonardo Da Vinci's wonderful painting, has been found.

The mystery of the stolen picture remains as profound as ever, and hopes therefore are brought forward to account for its disappearance.

The affair has been discussed everywhere to-day as a national scandal. Two days ago it was announced that they would present interpellations to the government. The latter, however, forestalled the general wish by officially announcing that once responsibilities were ascertained, those found guilty of negligence would be punished in an exemplary manner.

Meanwhile the museum is closed indefinitely. A great number of employes, including Sherlock Holmeses, continued to advance the most extraordinary ideas, which, however, never got further than to feed the imaginations.

The council of war was held in the Louvre, those in attendance being M. Steeg, minister of public instruction; Joseph Reinach, under secretary of public instruction and the arts; M. Lepine, prefect of police; M. Hennion, director of the Louvre; Examining Magistrate Drioux, who is charged with the investigation, and the different chiefs of the museum. Various suspects were all questioned, weighed and examined in turn and rejected for lack of evidence. Though the Louvre has been searched it is possible that the modern has not been finished, but is hidden in one of the innumerable recesses. All the gatekeepers are positive that no such package as the picture would fit has made was taken out of the museum.

There is an immense packing room, which contains a quantity of cases used for sending off plaster casts of the statues and similar articles, and provided with screws and schools. It is thought that the picture may be hidden in one of these cases and covered with plaster.

An experiment established the fact that while a gangway, or a door, is being used to the work, could handle a picture the size of "Mona Lisa" unaided, it would be practically impossible for an inexpert hand to detect it and carry it away.

The attendants at the Salon Carre, in the Louvre, where the painting had had the place of honor for five years, now tell of having wondered at the calm way in which the picture was taken down from its place.

Nothing in connection with the case has been reported at 6 a. m. to-day, of Fire Jelsmi, Captain Conlic, of the liner, sent wireless dispatch to the Shawmut station, stating that a shaft was broken and that the boat was going at reduced speed.

TWO HOLDUPS IN LYNN MARSHES

The police of Lynn, Chelsea and Revere are searching for three well dressed men who committed two daring holdups in the Lynn marshes close to the Revere line. The trio are believed to be members of the same gang who a year ago were suspected in several brazen and bold ups in the same vicinity and kept the persons living near the Revere-Lynn line in a state of terror for two weeks.

Patrick W. Kane of No. 35 Cedar street, Lynn, is the latest victim of the gang. Crane was on his way home from a dance, and getting off the car in the marshes in Revere, started to cross the marshes on foot. He had gone but a short distance when the three men sprang from their hiding place on the side of the road and bore him to the ground. Crane put up a battle, but he was beaten almost into insensibility and the trio escaped with a gold watch and chain, valued at $50.

A short time previous, a man driving across the marshes was held up by the same three men. They told him to give up what valuables he had, but instead of complying with their demand he whipped up his horse and escaped. Crane reported the robbery to the Lynn police. A squad of policemen went out to search for the robbers, and the police of Chelsea and Revere were also notified.

"The Democratic ship will be rigidly quarantined against the special interest rats who are about to be driven out of the sinking Republican ship.

"This organization will welcome all honest Democrats, and will gladly co-operate and affiliate with all Democratic organizations having like purposes in view.

"We earnestly ask leading State Democrats desiring a charter to communicate at once with our national organization. Geo. H. Shibley is temporary secretary and Robert L. Owen is temporary chairman.

"The executive council will be elected after the charter has been issued, and will consist of nine members.

"All private citizens are invited to take part in the organization who desire to establish the actual rule of the people and eliminate the rule of privilege.

"This can be done by giving the people absolute control of the Democratic party, then putting that party in control of the government.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST
COPYRIGHTED BY PURDY

"William Randolph Hearst has been advocating the essential principles of Democracy for years, and I rejoice to know his magnificent papers will continue to stand for these doctrines. He has done a great work in promoting genuine progress and deserves the appreciation of all who stand for honest and efficient government.

"The Federation is in the interest of no man. It stands for principles of good government and for nothing else."

MR. HEARST SEES A GLORIOUS OPPORTUNITY FOR DEMOCRACY

The people in the United States were shocked and astounded at that act of Mr. Taft.

Many regarded it as a complete surrender to the interests.

Even those who felt kindly to Mr. Taft recognized his action to be an absolute abandonment of his professed principles and an actual betrayal of the citizens who had given him their confidence and their votes.

Most of the people attributed Mr. Taft's signing of the Aldrich bill to his easy-going good nature, or to his timidity, or to his inexperience or even to his inefficiency. There were but few who attributed it to downright political dishonesty.

But now upon the heels of Mr. Taft's approval of the Aldrich bill comes Mr. Taft's veto of the farmers' free list bill and the woolen bill, mild and moderate measures of tariff reduction in a few schedules, measures which give the overburdened public a part, and yet only a small part of the relief which Mr. Taft's party platform promised to give them and which Mr. Taft personally and publicly pledged himself to give them.

These mild and moderate measures of long-promised tariff reduction, these cautious and conservative embodiments of Mr. Taft's own tariff reform professions Mr. Taft ruthlessly rejects.

Not even those who are most kindly disposed to Mr. Taft, not even those who are most anxious to believe in his honest contentions can find any explanation of this latest and largest repudiation of his pledges other than base betrayal of the citizens and squalid surrender to the political power of the tariff-protected trusts.

Truly Mr. Taft is the legitimate successor of the late lamentable Mr. Roosevelt, truly he is the direct and immediate inheritor of Mr. Roosevelt's famous, or, rather, infamous policies.

Not Roosevelt himself could have carried out better than Taft those characteristic "policies" of empty promise to the people and fruitful service to the trusts.

Mr. Taft, like Mr. Roosevelt, has "saved the nation," and like Roosevelt has saved it for the trusts.

Mr. Roosevelt in his day strenuously threw himself into the financial breach, and, by liberal and illegal concessions to his campaign contributors, succeeded in stopping a panic of his own creation—some time after it had ceased to exist.

Mr. Taft, even more assiduous in obsequious service to the trust, unhesitatingly sacrificed his party platform and his personal pledges to stop a panic which never had existed save in his own timorous heart.

Both Mr. Taft and Roosevelt remedied an artificial or imaginary disaster by inflicting a real one. Both tenderly lifted a burden from the frail shoulders of the financial world and promptly placed it upon the calloused and accustomed shoulders of the plain people.

Where is Mr. Taft's easy-going good nature now?

Where are his timidity, his inexperience, his inefficiency?

In the service of the trusts he is swift and sure, courageous to the point of recklessness, and experienced as a trust lawyer may well be and ever efficient in a ponderous way, like a draft horse that strains under the lash and pulls his part in the trust team.

No, Mr. Taft is only easy-going and timid, inexperienced and inefficient, when called upon to carry out his pledges to the people and serve the citizens who trusted him and elected him.

Mr. Taft, by his veto, has undoubtedly secured for himself a renomination by the Republican party, or rather by the plundering interests which control conventions. Whether or not he has secured a re-election will depend upon how far the citizenship of the country can itself be controlled or at least confused by those plundering powers.

It is useless to deny that powerful privileged interests have had a determining influence upon local and national elections in America for many years.

It is because of this significant fact that the politicians have come to consider the support of those privileged interests of more importance than the approval of the citizens themselves.

It is because of those deplorable conditions that politicians have come to acknowledge a feudal fealty to the trusts and to disregard their democratic duty to the citizens.

Those citizens who have intelligent and patriotic concern for the future of the nation must make a concerted effort to end the corrupt, selfish, autocratic and oppressive rule of high-handed finance in American politics.

The time to end it is now.

The Republican party has formed the Republican Progressive League in the earnest effort to conduct conventions under the control of the people and nominate candidates who will represent the people.

In all probability this effort will fail.

The privileged interests which have controlled Republican conventions in the past will doubtless control them in the future and will nominate candidates of their own selection for their own service.

In this situation there is a glorious opportunity for the Democratic party to become the progressive popular party of the nation and to render a patriotic service by rescuing the government of the nation from the despotic domination of the trusts.

Let a Progressive Democratic League be formed and let that league devote its time to securing the nomination for President of an honest, sincere, loyal and dependable Progressive Democrat, whose campaign pledge can be amply guaranteed by an uninterrupted record of genuine performance.

If the trusts, through corruption and coercion, shall control the Democratic convention, as they will the Republican convention, if they shall nominate a trust-controlled Democrat, as they will nominate a trust-controlled Republican, then let the Democratic Progressive League unite with the Republican Progressive League and place a genuine progressive of whatever party in the field, fearlessly to make the fight for the citizens and to oppose the bi-partisan representatives of the trusts.

Mr. Taft has fired the first gun of the campaign of 1912 from the camp of intrenched privilege.

Let the heavy artillery of the people thunder a defiant answer. One swallow does not make a Summer, and one deserter does not make a disaster, even though he be the President of the United States.

PLEDGES KEPT, SAYS UNDERWOOD

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—The editorial letter from William Randolph Hearst in Paris, published in the Washington Post, attracted immediate and widespread attention, as it appeared to nearly all politicians to outline the real Presidential campaign for 1912.

Whatever differences of opinion existed as to the purpose of Mr. Hearst's open letter to the politicians of the country, one point was conceded by the self-evident proposition that if neither the Republican party nor the Democratic party can find a candidate to meet the exigencies of the most important Presidential canvass in the history of the country, that candidate must be found somewhere who will represent the progressive ideas of the nation.

Resume of Situation.

Naturally, there is a good deal of guessing as to the motive of Mr. Hearst which is plainly enough expressed in his communication to the Washington Post.

The following resume of the situation precipitated by Mr. Hearst's letter is taken from the Evening Star:

"The heavy artillery of William Randolph Hearst having opened on Mr. Taft marks the opening of the most vicious political fight in the history of the country, according to political opinion to-day.

"At the same time the sounding of the Hearst guns is designed to indicate that Mr. Hearst is to take a most active part in the coming campaign, possibly as a candidate for President himself.

"Ranking President Taft as having gone over to the 'interests' by his tariff vetoes, the New York editor intimates that if the Democrats nominate the same kind of man as their candidate for President, there will be a third party candidate, representing progressive politics of both parties.

Mr. Hearst's Attitude.

"The significance of the Hearst pronunciamento is not so much in that it opens up a specific fight on the President by the Democrats and the Republican insurgents, to be kept up from now until the close of the polls in November next as that it means that Mr. Hearst himself may be a candidate for President either on the Democratic ticket or on a third party ticket.

"Some months ago Mr. Hearst, who had done much to help elect Governor Harmon of Ohio for a second term, indicated, in an interview, that Mr. Harmon would not receive his support for the Democratic nomination. He spoke in the highest terms of Champ Clark as the right man for the nomination, and is understood to have given orders to his friends to push Champ Clark from now on.

"Should the Democratic national convention, however, fail to nominate Clark, or some one regarded by Mr. Hearst as progressive, Mr. Hearst gives plain notice that he is either in the field to lead a third party or will support some one man representing progressive ideas and thoughts.

"Whether Mr. Hearst regards Governor Wilson of New Jersey as progressive, no one can tell from any recent utterance. His unstinted praise of Champ Clark points to his intention to make the Missourian the choice of the progressives for the Democratic nomination.

Has Many Supporters.

"Having led the Clark forces, and Clark failing to get the combination with the progressives in control of the convention the figure of Hearst would loom up as the man for the progressives to rally to, it was pointed out to-day.

"Hearst, it is said, undoubtedly will have many personal friends and supporters in the convention. From his own State of New York he could command little strength if the Tammany men control the delegation, but from California, Illinois and other States he will have adherents and parties ready to rush to him as a dark horse. It is intimated that Mr. Hearst would not be disposed to run as a ticket headed by Clark for President and himself for Vice-President.

"Whatever his own political aspirations or his position for others, Mr. Hearst has cut himself loose from any possibility of sympathy with President Taft and the Republicans. The New York man is again in the Democratic fold, at least until the Democratic fall, if they do, to put up a progressive candidate for the presidency.

"There is now little question that Mr. Hearst and the papers will keep up a hot fight, and that in New York an effort will be made to head off Tammany and its forces and control the New York Democratic delegation. That effort may go so far, it was suggested to-day, as to bring about a contesting delegation from New York."

Some Washington Expressions.

The following are expressions from prominent men now in the capital on Mr. Hearst's letter:

Senator Robert L. Owen, Oklahoma—I read the letter of Mr. Hearst published to-day in the Post. It was a splendid statement of the case.

Representative Stanley, Kentucky, chairman of the Steel Investigating Committee—When the wool veto came into the House I asked: "Is this a veto of a Democratic measure, or the death warrant of the Republican party?" Mr. Hearst's admirable interview shows he holds a similar opinion of those vetoes. I do not think the veto messages will justify the President before the country.

Mr. Hearst dissects the conditions sharply and clearly. It was the duty of a great executive, if there had been defects in verbiage in those bills, to have pointed out the defects early, that they might be remedied, and not, like a sly pleader, waited and made them the bases for vetoes, thereby defeating the will of the people and nullifying himself on his own promises and platform pledges.

Representative Cordell Hull, Tennessee—Mr. Hearst's comments on Taft's tariff attitude are sound, forcible and timely. He describes accurately the President's shifting and evasive attitude in dealing with the tariff. He is correct entirely in his conclusions that the President has abandoned his professed downward tariff revision views and has gone back to the stand-pat camp of high protection.

Representative Morris Sheppard, Texas—I think Mr. Hearst has stated the situation exactly. I am glad to see that he is in line for the Democratic ticket in 1912. President Taft was inconsistent in accepting Democratic support for Canadian reciprocity, a tariff revision measure, and then refusing to come to the aid of the Democrats in making more beneficial reductions of the tariff along other lines of communate importance to all the people.

Representative John D. Baker, California—Mr. Hearst's statement is a terrific arraignment of the President and his policy. It points out accurately and clearly the weakness and defects of the present National Administration upon the dominant questions of the tariff. The statement sounds the keynote of the coming Democratic national campaign, and will go far to crystalize the progressive Democracy of the country into a solid fighting force that will sweep all before it in the next national election.

George L. Shibley, secretary of the Federation of Democratic Precinct Clubs—I am of the opinion that Mr. Hearst expresses the present issues very clearly. I am also of the opinion with readers that the progressive movement begun to-day stands for principles which have been enunciated very often by Mr. Hearst. Notably, I think we all agree with Mr. Hearst that it is the members of a party that should control it rather than any organization.

Representative Hamilton, West Virginia:

I agree with Mr. Hearst that the vetoes of President Taft on the downward tariff revision bill were unjustified, especially in the item of the wool schedule bill. The President had said the schedule was unjustifiable. The bill sent him was a compromise between the Democratic idea and progressive Republican views. It was admitted by Republicans that the bill carried protection. This the Democrats conceded to a Republican Senate that some relief might be afforded the people or this country. The President has denied the people this relief and it is up to him, as Mr. Hearst suggests, to defend himself. I think Mr. Hearst right when he concludes that President Taft can not make his defense with the people.

Underwood Speaks on Tariff Revision

Representative Underwood, Democratic leader of the House of Representatives, said to the AMERICAN:

"Two matters will attract the interest of people to the Democratic side in the next campaign, one of tariff and the other is expenditures.

"We've shown in Congress that we would carry out our promise. We've carried them out and put them up to the White House and its Republican inmate.

"Five schedules of the tariff we revised downward—wool, cotton, steel, chemicals and what is called the farmers' free list.

"Each was vetoed by the Republican President. For him the Democratic majority put through his own measure for Canadian reciprocity. Unfortunately, we had not command of the two-thirds vote necessary to intercede his vetoes.

"Two of the things we promised and which he himself pledged himself to.

"We have shown that we can organize ourselves effectively and harmoniously. Best things are accomplished by organization. I believe—that's why I've always been addicted to 'regularity.' Nothing, indeed, can be accomplished except by organization. Outside Congress, as well as inside, the party is in strong unity.

"About expenditures—why, we used to talk about billion dollar Congresses. It's not now to build new divisions of Congress. We are going to trim that in the House of Representatives alone we have been able to cut expenses $160,000.

Reason in Cutting Tariff.

In a speech last night at the Waldorf before the Italian Democratic League Representative Underwood pointed the attending guests by revealing why President Taft had vetoed all the tariff bills passed up to him by the extra session, and by asserting his hearers that the Democrats were not for "smiting the underlining" from office at the house of protection, but for "lowering it with a lackscrew."

"My friends," said he, "there is not one word of one pledge that the Democratic party has made to the people that we have not endeavored honestly and fairly and thoroughly to keep, to keep faith with the people.

"We have been unfortunate in having a President in the White House who believes in a principle that we did not. The time has come, in my judgment, when a reactionist tariff will can no longer develop the great resources of the United States.

"In many lines we are overdeveloping for our home consumption. In order that we may not have idle factories and hungry men and women and children, we must find markets for our surplus products on the other side of the seas."

FOSS TO SPEAK BEFORE GOVERNORS

SPRING LAKE, N. J., Aug. 24.—Plans for the annual conference of Governors of the States of the Union, September 12 to 16, are practically completed. Employers' liability, inheritance tax, fixing of interstate railroad utilities and prison labor will be the principal topics discussed. It is expected that thirty-seven Governors will attend. The principal address of the opening day will be made by Governor Eugene N. Foss of Massachusetts.

WHAT SOCIETY WOMEN USE FOR SHAMPOOING

"Many society women," writes Mrs. Mae Martyn, in the Los Angeles Press, "prefer doing their own shampooing rather than go to the hairdresser's. The reason is obvious. Women whose social duties occupy most of their time do not feel like getting aside several hours for a trip to and from the shampoo parlor, hence the growing popularity of the home-shampoo. The use of canthrox is gaining favor because it requires little work, and after a canthrox shampoo has been enjoyed the scalp is spotlessly clean and the hair takes on a delightful lustre and fluffiness. Canthrox shampoos are excellent for allaying itching and correcting all scalp and hair troubles. To prepare, dissolve a teaspoonful canthrox in a cup hot water and your shampoo is ready."

BEATTIE BEGINS FIGHT FOR LIFE

like his wife on four or five times in the week in which Mrs. Beattie was her guest. On each occasion he said some member of the family accompanied Miss Green, except on the night of the killing.

Describing the wound on the body of Owen Beattie, "On the left cheek close to the nose, was about as big as a half-dollar. Blood from the wound had so clotted her hair that I first thought the top of her head had been blown off."

Gave Beattie a Coat.

He said the body subsequently was examined by Drs. Mercer, Mann and Loving, and that he had noticed the condition of Beattie's clothing, he said:

"There was blood on his coat. I got him a coat of my own. I don't remember seeing any blood on his shirt. I gave him a coat of my own."

The blood-spotted coat was then presented to the witness for identification.

On his shirt also were splashes of blood. The next morning he insisted on wearing his coat to his own home, saying that the blood stains would not be noticed. I offered one of my coats, but he insisted on using his own.

The witness then identified the bloody shirt and coat. They both showed large splotches of blood, he marked that it was evident that Beattie must have sat upon his wife's head in the wild automobile ride from the desolate spot on the Midlothian pike to the Owen home.

The young prisoner came nonchalantly into court apparently confident of acquittal and undismayed by the fact that the ordeal of his life had been reached. He has maintained the same front and nerve in his cell in the little third floor that he displayed throughout his incarceration in Richmond. He slept from 9:30 last night until 7 a. m. and 8:00 ate a hearty breakfast prepared for him by Agnes, the sixteen-year-old daughter of Jailer Coghill.

Strong Guard on Prisoner.

Attempts by outsiders to see him in his cell were futile as he told the jailer he would see no one except his relatives and counsel.

Two armed guards kept watch outside the little jail all last night. Sheriff Gill declared there was no danger from violence at the hands of Chesterfield people, but that he thought it best to safeguard against possible efforts of a crank to injure the prisoner.

The cell in which the prisoner spent his first night here is a steel barred cage about ten feet square, located in the northeast corner of the second floor of the jail.

A window no larger than a loop hole admits the few rays of light that ever penetrate it. Beattie's cell is a few feet back from the window, and the only view he can obtain is a stretch of Virginia country unbroken by a single house.

Immediately below this cell on the first floor is the exact duplicate that will be occupied by Paul Beattie, Henry's cousin, and chief witness for the prosecution. Adjoining this, but about four times as large is the cell in which Joseph Binford, the seventeen-year-old girl with whom Henry Beattie is infatuated, and because of whom the State alleges he killed his wife, will be retained.

In Jail With Negroes.

Besides, there were nine other prisoners in the jail to-day, all State convicts, seven are negroes. The two white men occupied cells on either side of Beattie's and made frequent attempts to talk to him last night, but were rebuffed.

The jury of twelve men upon whom Beattie's fate rests, last night occupied the room fitted up for them in the little hotel just across the Court House. Sheriff Gill and Deputy Sheriff Geede spent the night with them and after an early "break fast, brought them down into the Court House grounds.

They pleaded to be allowed to see some newspapers and finally the sheriff asked a couple of newspaper men if they would go through the coulee of half a dozen newspapers they had and strike out every word bearing on that sex case. This was according to the instructions of Judge Watson. The newspapermen complied and the jurors sat on a big bench in the shadow of the giant oak tree and eagerly went over the mutilated copies handed to them until court convened.

Young Beattie, now charge of his own case, when the first vital moment arrived in his trial for his life.

He, and the lawyer, decided which four of the sixteen men in the jury box should not be permitted to pass upon his fate. He analyzed men after men, staring stupidly at each, weighing him carefully in a mental balance, and it was his mouth that the lawyers, that crossed off the names of those he didn't want.

The greeting between Henry Clay Beattie, Sr., and his son, the prisoner, was an affectionate one. The father embraced and kissed the son as the latter stepped from the automobile in which he was brought from the Henrico County Jail.

Virginia law has it that sixteen men shall be seated in the box, and that then the defence shall strike out four, leaving the customary twelve. It was when matters progressed to the striking-out point that the rich south accused of slaying his wife, asserted his amazing self-confidence.

"I'll do this myself," he whispered to Harry M. Smith, his chief counselor, and he arose calmly and looked over these men.

He held in his hand a list of names, with notes he had made beside each. He narrowed his eyes and gazed for minutes at a time, at one name after another. There was absolute silence in the place, an air of tensity that made the spectators almost hold their breaths. It was impossible to tell from the actions of Beattie's gaze just which man in the box he was analyzing. He came to a man in his forties—a heavy-browed individual, who from all appearance would be stern, severe.

Strikes Four Off.

"That one goes" he whispered to his attorney, and a stroke of the pencil wiped a name off the list.

Then he came to a young man, little more than his own age, twenty-three.

This man had seemed a little too easy of manner, with a constant smile on his rather weak face and an air almost of pride in having been chosen a possible actor in the great drama. "I can't stand for him for a minute," said the defendant. "Here he goes."

The two others he struck out were farmers, of no pronounced characteristics, favorable or unfavorable, and he also missed them was not apparent.

He then handed over his list of names to Attorney Smith and remained standing beside his lawyer at the latter read off the names of those "scratched." There was a trace of a smile on Beattie's face as he saw the four victims of his judgment take their hats and, rather regretfully, it seemed, departed.

"I like the twelve we've got now," he said, as he chatted for a moment with the correspondent when court adjourned. "I think they're all fair men and that we'll make rapid progress."

Absence of motive? it is generally conceded, will be the defence. A great number of witnesses will say that Beattie and his wife lived most happily together and the jail lawyers will ask: Why should he have killed her?"

The little woman's sorrow" very again here prominent, more interesting than the regular procedure. Several incidents that caught the attention of the northerners down here for the first time developed during the examination of jurymen.

When the jury was completed the twelve men who are to decide the fate of the accused and the prisoner were required to face one another before the taking of testimony began.

TWO PERISH IN GREAT HOTEL

CLAYTON, N. Others were forced to jump from windows. The loss is estimated at $100,000.

G. A. R. RANKS 9,390 THINNER

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 24.—Death thinned the ranks of the G. A. R. by nearly 9,400 men in the past year, according to the annual report of commander-in-Chief John A. Gillman read at to-day's session of the national encampment. The organization has 10,491 less members than it had this time a year ago, and of these 9,390 were died.

"We, the living, should not regret at a showing," said Commander Gillman, "but rather congratulate ourselves on our good physical condition compared with other years.

"Absence of motive" it is generally conceded, will be the defence. A great number of witnesses will say that Beattie and his wife lived most happily together and the jail lawyers will ask: Why should he have killed her?"

RUSTLERS HAVE NEW FOE IN CARDINALS

By R. W. LARDNER.

The St. Louis Cardinals will be the opponents of the Rustlers at the South End Grounds this afternoon. Roger Bresnahan's men are anxious to make a showing on this, their last Eastern trip, and in so do they need beam doing something pretty soon.

The Rustlers are glad that the Cincinnati series is over, for they had all kinds of hard luck in their battles with Griffith's crew. They have done much better against St. Louis than Cincinnati this season, and stopped the Cardinals nine times out of three during the recent Western trip.

There are several pertinent facts to be considered for the flag still flying in the air. The Cards have not as much right to expect a pennant as the Giants, Phillies, and the latter haven't yet quit hoping.

"Cy" Young in Box.

Cy Young may pitch one of the games of to-morrow's double-header, but the chances are he will be saved for to-day, which marks the last appearance of Bresnahan's boys in Boston this year.

Roger's pitching staff consists of one real veteran and three or four recruits, who are going along nicely when the season is in the last lap. The club was pacing good ball behind effective hurling and commanding the respect of all opponents. Recently the pitchers have struggled a little and the Cards have been unable to live up to their Jolly reputation. But now one can figure them easy even now.

Harry Salies, the veteran, is said to beat any club in the league, and Bob Harmon, the near veteran, has it on some of the team's rivals. He has been able to do anything with the Rustlers, but there are lots of pitchers in the same boat.

Roger has been shifting the batting order around in the hope of driving away the slump. The manager himself was put out of the game by a Philadelphia umpire and Jack Bliss has been pressed into daily service. Roger's absence hurts, mentally and materially, for he keeps his athletes on the jump and also adds to the team's offensive and defensive strength.

There's one thing certain, whether the Cardinals win the National League championship or finish fifth, and that is that this year's club has been a money maker. Mr. Bresnahan has nothing to be ashamed of when the first and fifteenth come around for he has made the Cards a big success financially. They draw on the road as they never did before, and their home attendance has been record-breaking.

Rustlers Getting the Crowds.

Speaking of attendance, the Rustlers are not playing to empty seats these days. Whether the drawing card is Mike Donlin, Al Bridwell, George Jackson, John Kling, Cy Young or all of them combined, it is not whether it's just the recent winning habit, the fact remains that money is coming into the strong box at the South End Grounds more money than has been the way there for years.

And the bugs no longer go to the games with a feeling of pity or derision. They are expecting victories and then bitterly disappointed when the victories fail to appear.

Really, when you come right down to it, a post season series with the Red Sox would not be much a treat. It is only when the two clubs last met at present, the Rustlers have risen to the occasion and interested in them. Everybody knows that the Sox are popular and when the two most popular teams matched, people are going to turn out to see them. So, as we look the race down in the race one of the teams may be.

President Russell is perfectly willing to mix it up with Mr. Taylor's bunch. The proxy is nothing if not game, optimistic, or professes to believe, that his club would stand better than an even chance against the Huntington Avenue outfit, and he also believes that the folks would welcome a series.

As has been remarked before, President Taylor has no personal objection, but he doesn't know whether his players would care for the work after their extra long season. So it still appears to be up to the athletes themselves.

MOORE, PHILLIES' STAR, OFFERED FOR TRADE

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 24.—Believing that he can't win for long, President Fogel of the Phillies has placed Earl Moore, one of the greatest pitchers in the National League, on the market, and it is believed within the next twenty-four hours the right-handed speedster will be traded or will be traded to another club.

Mr. Fogel has made definite offers of Moore to four clubs—Chicago, Pittsburg, New York and Brooklyn. The leader of the Phillies does not underestimate the value of Moore, and he will only part with him if he gets one or two notable stars in return. Moore has offered Umpire Klem, Pitcher Reulbach and Outfielder Schulte. In addition, Fogel has offered Lobert, an outfielder, but the Cubs demurred at parting with Schulte, and rejected the proposal to Fogel that the latter rejected.

"If you won't make a trade for Earl Moore," said Fogel to Owner Murphy of the Cubs, "then I'm willing to offer him to your pennant rivals—New York and Pittsburg." True to his word, Fogel wired John T. Brush and offered Moore for a pitcher, who is said to be Christy Mathewson. The Phillies' leader also had talk with Manager Clarke, of Pittsburg, and Moore was offered to the Pittsburg Club for Pitcher Harry Adams and Outfielder Dode Paskert. Mr. Fogel went to Atlantic City to consult with Manager Dooin over a proposition for Moore coming from the Pirates. Dreyfuss is also at Atlantic City.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 24.—The Red Sox are on hand to open the series with the St. Louis Browns this afternoon Joe Wood will do the box work for the visitors, and the present dope is Collins will be used to-morrow.

The Red Sox run up against the Browns at a time when Bobby Wallace has his men going well, his pitchers really looking like twirlers. These men have given Boston a fight they won't forget in a long while to come, the record for the season's series being an even break. Hemingway, Pelty, Powell and Hamilton, with Mitchell, still probably to be heard from, made sent against Boston in this series of three games, and all these Browns are in shape. Lake isn't feeling very well and will hardly be used against the Red Sox.

From third place to sixth place can be dropped in a very short time by the Red Sox with the teams all bunched as they are, the margin being very slight. Every game from now on to the end of the season will count and the strongest team possible should be put into the field and also pitch. Hooper has been ill for over two weeks and the only word that has come from the team was brought when Nagle joined it in Buffalo.

Of course, if Hooper is too weak to play, that settles it and the Sox will have to dump along. If he could get into those games at Chicago it would mean a victory or two. The team is pulling hard for a rapid recovery of the remarkable ball player. This should not be taken as an indication that Boston hasn't delivered, for he has made good, the difference being that with star, slingshelter a good ball player from a star.

Never was the collapse more vividly presented than in Cleveland when Manager Donovan looked his material over for a pitcher in the pinch. He found none that has he had a pinch hitter all season. Jack Warhop delivered about twice. He kept his team in the race for third place as long as he has, but that is all he has to work with, reductions to the credit of Pater Donovan.

JAMAICA PLAIN PLAY ST. JAMES K. OF C.

The champion Jamaica Plain K. of C. team meets the St. James K. of C. nine next Saturday at the American League grounds, and a real hot game is certain, the game being the strongest of all the games in the State.

The Jamaica Plain team is this year's champion of the K. of C. League and the St. James, won the K. of C. championship in 1910. Music will be furnished by the Mission Church Band and the St. James Drum and Fife Corps.

The batteries will be Malloy and Fitzgerald for St. James and Barrett and Treehorn for Jamaica Plain. The game will start at 2:30 sharp and the ball will not be thrown into play by William O'Brien, State deputy of the Knights of Columbus of Massachusetts.

PRESIDENT TAFT MAY SEE BENEFIT GAME

Saturday afternoon the Page Class ball team goes to Gloucester to play for the benefit of the L. M. Haskins Hospital of Rockport. The players on their list are friends will go over on the North Shore in automobiles and arrive at the field about 3 o'clock. Other members of the class also with ladies and friends, are planning to take in the trip and a goodly number is expected. President Taft, an honorary member of the Page Class, has been invited to come up from Beverly and attend the game. A delightful outing is looked forward to and an interesting game is expected.

JOE JEANETTE WINS EASILY OVER MAXSON

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—Joe Jeanette practically knocked out "Dummy" Maxson of Brooklyn in the first two minutes of their fight at the Fairmont Athletic Club here. Jeanette started like a whirlwind in the opening round and the last time Maxson went down he was unable to get up alone and has to be assisted to his corner after the referee and stopped the bout.

ROSS IN SHAPE FOR LANGFORD

By JACK CONWAY.

Mr. Sammy Langford, our famous black "hope," will gain a little more fame and some of the stuff which is commonly known as the coin of the realm when he mixes things with Arnold Rosalino, alias Tony Ross, in a ten-round bout at the National Sporting Club in New York to-night.

Ross is one of the toughest heavyweights not to captivity. He packs a wallop which lands with the force of a twenty-pound sledge hammer.

Tony has engaged in little warfare with some of the best battlers in the ring, and on a large number of occasions has come out on the front end. He has gone down to defeat, but not until after he had given his antagonist well aware of the fact that he had engaged in a prize fight.

Beat Ross in 1908.

Langford fought Ross on April 7, 1908, in New York, and won the bout by a knockout in five rounds. But there are many people who believe that Sam will not have such easy picking to-night.

Ever since it was announced that Langford and Ross would exchange greetings there have been published to the effect that the "Tar Baby" is doing practically no real training in preparation for the mill. Similar stories were circulated before the O'Brien-Langford match. And everybody knows in what superb condition Langford was in when he entered the ring with "Philadelphia Jack."

Sam is a boxer who is never in what could be called poor condition. He takes good care of himself and is usually ready to go and mix with the best of them after a week's notice.

The writer knows for a fact that Langford has been in training for the past six weeks, and during the latter part of July he kept talking daily workouts on his farm in Nova Scotia. Following Boston a week before his battle with O'Brien and started a systematic course of training at the Armory Club along with "Porky" Flynn.

Since he buried "Honest John Jack," Sam not has been engaging in daily workouts at Northport. And when a man of Langford's calibre is in condition he has nothing to fear from a scrappy like Ross.

Easy for the "Tar Baby."

Even though Ross is one of the best white heavyweights in the country he should be easy for Langford. If Sam fights his best, and it looks as though he would, he should put Ross away before the end of the tenth round. But even though he don't send Tony on a trip to Smithereens, Langford should get the best on points.

Sammy will soon be packing his little grip and beating it over the seas for Australia, where he is scheduled to take a full out of some of Australia's illustrious fighters.

While Sam is sojourning in the Antipodes our old friend Jack Johnson will also be eating at Australian hotels. And Sam is one big problem it is going to match with the Galveston man. There is no knowing but that the affair will take place before Sam completes his globe trotting stunt.

JACK JOHNSON'S OWN STORY OF HIS LIFE

The fourth of the world's champion's own narratives of his struggle to retrieve and fame in the ring will appear in the great Sport-page

BENZ BETTER THAN O'TOOLE

By BILL BAILEY.

CHICAGO, Aug. 24.—Let a young minor league player sell for a phenomenal sum of money and that player immediately becomes the standard by which all other players in that league are gauged.

There are Marty O'Toole and Joe Benz, for instance. O'Toole is the fellow who was sold to the Pirates for $22,500. Benz is the young man who was purchased by President Comiskey of the White Sox and who worked against the Detroit Tigers in three innings of the last game between the white-hosed fellows and the crew of Jennings.

O'Toole Not a Marvel.

O'Toole lost year pitched in the Western League. Nor was he so well thought of on there. Even now the fellows who own ball clubs in that part of the country are absolutely certain that he is worth no such sum of money as Barney Dreyfuss paid. A good pitcher? Yes, they answer, but not a great one.

Well, soon after the sale of O'Toole this fellow Benz was placed on the market. Manager Hedland finally made a trip out to the Moines, for whom Benz pitched, and looked the youngster over. Then he visited some of the other cities of the circuit and finally landed in St. Joseph, Mo. That's where Jack Holland is the boss. You call Holland and Duffy are fellows, for the manager of the White Sox naturally sought the minor league manager.

"About the Benz?" queried the Chicago manager.

"You will make no mistake," was the answer of Holland. "You know what O'Toole is. Well, when he left the league last year he wasn't anywhere near the class that Benz is today.

"If O'Toole is worth anywhere near the price that Barney Dreyfuss paid for him Benz figure is worth more than $10,000."

That seemed to be the price that the two Major league people were asking, for they wired several of the magnates offering the young pitcher for that sum. Whether Mr. Comiskey said that amount is not known. But that he paid a good sum for the pitcher is pretty certain.

Larry Doyle Sets Fashion.

But, getting down to the first proposition. Let a man step out of the minor leagues and make good and he immediately becomes the standard by which all other players are judged. Larry Doyle was among the first of the ball players to sell for a high amount. Immediately, when a Three-Eye magnate wanted to dispose of a young player he attempted to compare the major league magnate that the youngster was just as good as Doyle was when he left the Springfield club.

Up in Michigan they measure their pitchers by "King" Cole, of the Cubs. Any attempt to negotiate for a pitcher in that locality and the first word you get from the willing club owner is that the fellow you are looking at is certainly as good as Cole ever was and that he even looks better.

Out in the Western League O'Toole has become the standard. After all time that you attempt to buy a twirler and then you learn that he is just as good as the Pittsburg pitcher.

Now, that is nothing against Benz. Whether he is as good as O'Toole or not is quite beside the mark. Down on the South Side they think they have a pitcher. He's a big fellow. He has a lot of nerve and that was proved when he set the Tigers down one after the other in the three innings that he worked.

That is after he got started. And his first time up proved something. The man up signled and the next doubled. That was enough to make a youngster panicky. But Benz did not weaken. He set down the next nine men to face him one after the other, in order.

GOTCH PLANS A QUICK FINISH IN HACK BOUT

HUMBOLDT, Ia. Aug. 24. Remembering the terrible strain of his long match with Hackenschmidt three years ago and that strength confidence, the snap, ebbs as the match drags on, Frank Gotch today declared that he was planning on a quick finish to the match. Instead of tugging with his opponent and trying to find out just what his strength and prowess, knowledge of the game is Frank is going right in from the jump to bring home the victory. If he does not say he will try the same trick that he worked on Zbyszco in gaining the first fall, but he says he has a better and more effective one and one into which Hack will surely fall.

Gotch Confident.

If confidence and the perfection of methods will carry any one through to victory Gotch has as good as retained his title as champion wrestler of the world. A defeat at the hands of Hackenschmidt would be the greatest surprise the Iowa farmer ever has experienced in his mat career.

But when he enters the ring to grapple with the huge Russian, Gotch does not contend that he will be returned the victor whether it takes him only a few minutes or if the struggle is prolonged for hours. One thing can be set down positively and that is that the triumph is sure to terminate the battle just as he desires.

There have been many who have cried Gotch's chances of winning would be increased the longer the match goes. Some of those who are strong in this belief have been in the game for a long time. Gotch has his own private views and lately he told a few things to those in the know on the minds of the two methods of wrestling as to whether or not a long struggle would be to his disadvantage.

Satisfied With Endurance.

"I've certainly got everything in the game although there was no doubt when I started training as to my endurance to outlast Hackenschmidt. He seemed to me needed," declared Gotch. "Now as the result of hard work I figure that I have worked myself to the point where I will be able to stand the grueling that is sure to result just as well as the Russian. I know he is strong, but I also know that he does not use his strength to the best advantage. I discovered that to wasted lots of it in our first match three years ago, and I do not think that he has improved sufficiently since to overcome that fault.

"When we met on Labor Day the knew color I gained two years ago will be of the greatest benefit in the world to me, for the reason that I will not be taken to attack, as I will be. I will not have to pay it safe this time for I know myself and without boasting I want to say that I believe in myself thoroughly.

Burns Changes His Mind.

Farmer Burns today admitted he was pleased over Gotch's condition, while at first, he thought was not good. After working two days on the mat with the champion he changed his mind. Burns thought at first that Gotch was not as strong as necessary and that his wind and defense were poor. He admitted today he was

"Young Marquand" Tosses Off Game to Umperiners, 46 to 18

The Waspo' new pitcher, whom Captain "Poggy" Mullane has been wheeling about the neighborhood, and when he got ready for the last two weeks, showed up at yesterday's game. More than that, he worked a rather pratched from the beginning to the end. He was great, for the Umperiners. He also walked twenty-seven men, gave away about fourteen hits, struck out every time at bat, refused to let anybody steal a base, offered to fight any six kids in the neighborhood, and when he got ready to go home said he was going to show up at the next game and do the same thing over.

He further announced that he does not care a rap what the public thinks about him or how many games he loses, as long as he learns to pitch with his left hand which he used exclusively in yesterday's game. We know from past experience that there are others of more importance than you, Ig Ibs," he admitted, his eyes far away.

"If only you were not a coward!" she continued to taunt him, hoping to goad the man, perhaps, to the course she longed to see him take. "Of all things, I never thought you a coward, in old days."

"You, at least, are no coward," he said. "After what you tell me you saw and heard, you came back to Friars' Most and poured tea for us in the drawing room."

"You forced me to come in," she protested. "I felt as if I should die. It seemed then as if the world had come to an end."

"Yes," Sir Ian repeated dreamily. "Yes. It seemed as if the world had come to an end. I wish it had."

"It would have been better for you!" Nora exclaimed. "Will you go to England, and at least do what you can for Ian without endangering yourself?"

"Yes, I will go to England," he echoed, "and do what I can for Ian. As you say, there may be something."

Before she could answer, Terry Ricardo's voice called her from the balcony above. "Is that you Nora, with Sir Ian?"

"Yes," replied the girl, startled.

"I'm thankful!" cried Terry. "I was anxious about you, Nora. You were so long away. Is all well?"

"No. All is not well," Nora returned, her voice breaking sharply.

"Oh! Aren't you coming to tell me?"

"Yes, I'm coming." The girl turned to Sir Ian, and almost kissed at him, in a sublimal whisper. "Don't be afraid, now, and" I am not going to tell your part."

He drew away from her standing very straight and tall, his head up. But when Terry had bidden him "Good night," and both women had gone in, his chin dropped, and a long sigh came shuddering from his breast.

"Cupid's" Find

The day "Cupid" heard that Ian Barr had been trapped in France he made a find in the Vine Forest.

Although the police had reported at first that nothing was visible there which could afford a clue to the mystery, except in the room on the ground floor, Gaylor had never been satisfied. He wanted, if possible, to have a clear case against Barr, whom he now believed to be the murderer of Lady Hereward; and if he could come across any proof that Barr had been in the habit of using the Tower just before the tragedy, it would be a score. Consequently he searched, with the idea ever before him, and from far down under the seat and back of the battered, couch-like sofa in the upper room, he prized out a hairpin.

This was on the afternoon of the day when the news had come from France, and the best thing about the trophy, from the detective's point of view, was that the hairpin appeared to be a new one.

If it had been old, it might have fallen from some woman's head months or years before and worked its way down into the sofa; but it was new, and it had a certain individuality of its own. As no woman had entered the Tower since the murder, it was clear that one must have been there, in the upper room, not very long before the day of Lady Hereward's death, if not on the day itself. And the question arose in Gaylor's mind: Was it a woman whom Barr had met by appointment?

Naturally he thought of Miss Verney whose statements at the inquest had been so inexplicable. As he had said, Barr denied, and even fought with her in France, and it seemed more than ever probable that she and the young man had been together on the afternoon of the tragedy. It occurred to Gaylor that the girl might even be an accomplice, for Lady Hereward had separated her from her lover, temporarily at least, and caused Barr to forfeit the means of supporting a wife.

Vampire Wives

By MRS. MADGE HUMPHREY

IN all classes of society is to be found the vampire wife, and she is as varied in her type as she is unfortunately numerous.

First, there is the vain wife, who expects as much attention, coaxing flattery and fun bona of other a mile as a new dress, dressed on her in her clothing days. Some times she betrays herself in this way before marriage, as did the young woman who, on being proposed to by a young man, replied:

"I do not like you well enough to marry you, but perhaps I shall in time. If we meet [illegible] you can go on taking me to theatres and on the river, and we shall [illegible]."

This young woman began the vam pire's [illegible]

Later, because of her who exhibits the same nature in less ante-nuptial demands, a constant expectation of presents, of delicate little costly repasts when they are [illegible] of the theatre or dinner, of [illegible] of his wife's [illegible]

There are charming women whose very affection for their husbands makes them well-known vampires. They require a man's entire devotion, and are resentful if he allows even his [illegible] life work to [illegible] with his attention to herself.

One young wife expressed herself as being "jealous of the rainfall," a subject to which her husband was devoting much thinking and with a result recognized [illegible] as of great importance by men of science.

The Affectionate Wife

As I then there is the affectionate wife, who encourages in her man the indolence that is a natural part of human nature, to which we are all prone, strange companion of the energy that is equally [illegible]. "Don't do any more to-day. You have done quite enough." And the golden hour of work is lost. The gentle little partner is a vampire.

Some of these [illegible] vampires of many thousands of women, whose one idea is to compete with and excel their equals in entertaining in display, in acquiring distinction as leaders of their sets from the art wares of the [illegible] have a new carpet for the sitting room, been [illegible] wife's has just had one "up to the society women who must [illegible] a new car, of a new type in order to keep abreast of the expensive lure of one social rival.

Pretty and unthrifty wives have converted otherwise reasonable and amiable women into wives who would see their husbands on the verge of bankruptcy rather than forego what they consider necessary to maintaining or exalting their social level.

Many wives who might never have developed into vampires, though they have within them the germs of vanity and selfishness, have become so owing to our pernicious credit system.

From the wealthy women who runs up a heavy bill with her dressmaker, down to the cottager's wife, whom a family system of education has left with but the vaguest idea of arithmetic, and therefore at the mercy of a specious pedler, temptation to rife and only too successful.

[illegible] day comes at last, and the vampire wife has ruined the home.

But a few weeks since the papers told of a wretched husband whom his wife's debts had reduced to penury, followed by suicide. He was a hard working artisan in the higher walks of life there are plenty of instances of ruined homes and swift descent from luxury to poverty—the wife the cause of all.

Hindrance in Art

It is but fair to suggest that ignorance of the husband's financial position has often helped on the unfortunate situation.

In matters of art, the wife has often been a hindrance to her husband. Unable to understand his inspiration, incapable of sharing his point of view, she demands of him work that will bring in money rather than that which will lead him upward, developing his powers, enabling him to [illegible] self-respecting chats in the [illegible] of his life.

The world knows of one such case, well known painter, once of buffalo promise, but dragged down by the influence of a [illegible] but no one schooling but for a while, anyhow. He would try to get to France, and keep out of the way there till perhaps it might be safe to sail for America later. He realized that both our lives might be ruined; that—he might be suspected—hunted—even for years; but for your sake he didn't hesitate.

"We planned quickly that he should get his bicycle, on which he'd come from London, and wheel it through the woods, as you know one can do there, for miles, until he'd gone far beyond Riding Mr. Terry, or any place where he was likely to be recognized. Then, at Gudalton he would catch a train for Southampton; and unless an alarm had been raised already, he believed he could get to St Malo in a fishing-smack from close by Southampton, at a tiny place where he used to stay with his mother, as a boy, sometimes. He knew a family of fishermen there, who would help him. Ian was sure he could trust them not to tell, even if there [illegible] a hue and cry, and they never did.

"He said he would take his mother's name directly, and I must write him, Peste Restante, addressed to Rennes, to go eventually, and would discuss himself as best he could of things over to the world. He has all the [illegible] in the papers of course, but I couldn't send him till Miss Alcindo and I reached Paris.

Now you know the whole story. Through me fault he will be taken back to England, and tried for murdering Lady Hereward since you are so cruel and so cowardly."

"Judge not," said Sir Ian.

"What does it matter to you whether I judge or not?"

While the Waspo were busy losing yesterday, the Umperiners were industrious in the opposite direction. We never saw the "Englebeak" Spruder pitch a better game. The eighteen runs that crossed the plate cannot be blamed on him. Several of throws and all that, and the rest the fielders were responsible for. He explained it all to us after the game.

Whitewashes, the marvelous hitter of the [illegible] series, did not connect with the ball at all yesterday. Every time he went to the bat he just stood, waited and walked to first on four balls, compliments of Mr. "Young Marquand."

From every angle yesterday's scores was as much fun for the fans as an examination in arithmetic on a hot day.

Emily Norton and Socks and the hunk pill were not to be seen at all yesterday. Something must be wrong. Perhaps they have heard that "Shrimp" Flynn has another scheme to grab some of that money. We will be right there. Pull re-

It wasn't himself that he thought about. It was you. But I thought of him as well, and I knew if we weren't able to explain by telling the truth, he might be in great danger. "Well, my little man," he said as cheerfully as he could, "what's wrong? Are you lost?"

"No," blubbed the little man, "I ain't lost!"

The Prince subsided

The Problem of the New Girl

The Little Fledgling of To-day Has Got to Try Her Wings, Which Parents Must Realize.

By DOROTHY DIX.

WITHIN the last few days the police have been asked to search for two young girls who have mysteriously disappeared after the fashion in which [illegible] Arnold did

In both of these cases, as in the Arnold case, the girls belong to the families who are more than comfortable in [illegible] They had good homes, kind and loving parents, they were surrounded by luxuries but they were restless and dissatisfied, and had repeatedly expressed a desire to earn their own living, and to have some definite occupation in life.

This idea the parents pooh-poohed. Absurd! Ridiculous! Thank goodness, Maude or Susie didn't have to work. She could have all the pretty clothes and go to all the parties she wanted to, and what in Heaven's name could a girl desire more?

But Maude and Susie happened not to be girls with pink tea souls. Also they were very young and foolish, and romantic, and inexperienced, and so Maude and Susie committed the incredible folly of running away from home, and their new believed to be the murderer of Lady Hereward; and if he could come across any proof that Barr had been in the habit of using the Tower just before the tragedy, it would be a score. Consequently he searched, with the idea ever before him, and from far down under the seat and back of the battered, couch-like sofa in the upper room, he prized out a hairpin.

This was on the afternoon of the day when the news had come from France, and the best thing about the trophy, from the detective's point of view, was that the hairpin appeared to be a new one.

As no woman had entered the Tower since the murder, it was clear that one must have been there, in the upper room, not very long before the day of Lady Hereward's death, if not on the day itself. The Moral of It All

For the moral of the affair is this—that modern conditions, modern education, modern modes of thought have produced a new girl, just as they have produced a new woman, and that she has got to be dealt with on a new platform. The old, mediaeval bread-and-water, lock-her-up-in-a-room until-she-comes-to-reason method of treatment won't do.

The new girl is a condition and not a theory that confronts her parents and they are just as much puzzled and frustrated over her, and know as little what to do with her, as the old hen that hatched out a duck.

Of course if a girl is a girl and not a girl, who has an intellect, a girl who thinks, who has a bold and courageous spirit, a girl who has often a good education, which, perhaps, college bred and an athlete, and who looks at life very much with the eyes of a boy.

This girl, when she comes home from school, finds nothing adequate in her hands in the life she is asked to lead. She can't satisfy herself with the vapid rounds of society. She can't absorb herself in the hunt for a husband, for, while she means to marry if the right man ever about marriage is not the be all and end all there is for her, as it is for the [illegible] Ruffles on.

This girl is not to be found at home, she has certain definite aims, work and [illegible] that must be done, and she is [illegible] her throne as price of the [illegible] of a chair of [illegible] Judge Lindsey's book I want to go to even the most indifferent of fathers for every penny.

It is easy to shoot at this girl for her [illegible] and discontent, and to tell her that she doesn't know when she is well off and that she would be thankful that she has good home to live in and parents able to support her, and that is exactly what her father and mother do, and they accuse her of being a wicked and ungrateful girl when she persists in wanting to go out and try her own wings.

If her parents were wiser they would try to look at the girl's side of the question, and to realize that she is bound to have some outlet for her energies and young strength, some occupation for her idle hands some object [illegible] which she can spend her surplus [illegible]

Some girls can find little to society. Some can't. To be able to make a career of bridge whist and golf is not the best way, and the sooner parents realize this, the sooner we shall put a stop to tragedies that darken so many homes.

Occupy Her

There is but one solution of the problem of the unoccupied girl, and that is to occupy her. It is even more true of women than men that Satan finds work for idle hands to do, and the only way to keep a girl out of trouble is to keep her busy.

If a girl wants to be of some use in the world and to work, it matters not only for so they are climbs, to refuse her the right to pay her powers, and they have not [illegible] Some [illegible] an excess of horse [illegible] and the [illegible] she runs off from home to end the [illegible] Such girls [illegible] The [illegible] and to find it has been decided. Perhaps she may find out that she is not the [illegible] genius that she thought she was, perhaps when she finds out how hard it is to earn money, when she can't [illegible] on her father, she will be contented the balance of her life for having made the experiment.

At any rate, this much is certain—the little fledgling of to-day has got to try her wings, and it's a wise papa and mamma bird who let her make her first flight under their guidance, instead of forcing her to wreck out of the nest on her own.

Note how gallantly Claude Eclaire, hero, bears the weight of the clinging Rosamond as he chases Desperate Desmond, villain, along the under side of the trestle bridge. It would be an easy task for a sloth, which hangs head down from the branches, to chase along thus below the trestle, but it is a fearful strain on human arms. Yet Claude sticks to the job and must soon overtake Desmond.

Now Gomgutt comes upon the scene. For a long time he has been harassed by Little Phillip, Rosamond's schoolboy brother, but has at last managed to escape and is now ready to aid Desmond, the Great White Villain. The quick-witted savage quickly perceives an easy way to bring Claude's pursuit to an end. He rolls a large boulder along the trestle, with the idea of placing it upon the hero's fingers and anchoring him.

Poor Claude! His heroic fingers are jammed against the tie by the weight of the huge boulder, and he is helpless to move. There seems to be no hope for either Claude or Rosamond, as the chasm below is hundreds of feet in depth. The savage chuckles fiendishly over the treatle and jeers at the unfortunates beneath. It is in moments of triumph that a mean nature frequently reveals itself. Prosperity is a severer test than misfortune.

Scout! A Borneo convict has eluded his guards and is making a mad dash for liberty despite the efforts of his pursuers to stop and despite their deadly rifles. Unlike the English soldiers trying to scare a mob, these Borneo men will waste no shots in the air. Nevertheless, the prospect of liberty induces the convict to risk all to a desperate race across the treatle from which Claude and Rosamond are clinging.

Alas, for the hopes of the convict. His path is blocked by the huge boulder which holds fast the hands of Claude. To add to the misery of the wretched prisoner, the rock which stopped his flight is to be used as a means of punishment. The guards force him to roll the big stone back to the jail, where he must make it into a number of little ones. A monotonous occupation at best, and particularly so after a glimpse of freedom.

And finally we have a desperate chase and running battle along the trestle. "I'm the boy!" cries desperate Desmond, but I've got to beat it" as he dares with his cruel black side de camp, Gomgutte. Claude and Rosamond doggedly follow the scoundrels, black and white, determined to end the careers of both. Even now it looks like an even break between the two parties. Indeed, anything may happen in to-morrow's pictures.

"The Man Who Scolds Mother"

This, a Little Boy's Description of His Father, Fits More Men Than the World Will Ever Know

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

Copyright, 1911, National News Association.

A MAN walked hastily out of a house one morning slamming the door behind him with an energy that, if harnessed and properly utilized, would have shaken the dust out of every rug in the neighborhood, and disappeared down the street.

A stranger who had heard the door slam watched the man with interest. Turning to a boy who was playing in the yard he asked:

"Who is that man?"

"He," replied the boy, "is the man who scolds my mother."

"Ah!" you will say: "a problem in kinship. I am to be asked to figure what relation the man is to the woman he scolds," and you get pencil and paper and go to work.

That is, you do this if you are a man. A woman knows, as she knows enough to boil an egg, that the man who scolds mother is mother's husband; she knows that a woman's father and brother may sometimes grow critical, but the only man on earth who dares to scold her is her husband, the man she is working for with no pay but her board and clothes.

What He Thinks

She spends her days in working in the kitchen, in raising his children, in trying to be wife, mother, nurse, cook, laundress and seamstress with not as much wages as one of these laborers alone would demand, and when he comes home at night she receives a scolding that would have made her leave home if her father had given it, or that would part her from the best friend she had on earth if that best friend were as absolute.

He scolds because he takes the annoyances of his day's work house with him; he piles them on his back and carries them carefully lest one fall off, and when he reaches his wife he dumps them into her lap though that lap be filled with babies and darning baskets. He scolds because he is cross and tired, and, being a man, he believes he has a monopoly of grievance; he scolds because of the grind of his life, refusing to see that the life of a man who labors is one delightful round of pleasant surprise compared with the life of his wife, who also labors, and turns from one task to another with babies in her arms and at her heels.

No Fan for Her

He imagines that she has much to be grateful for, and so she has; she is grateful because she baby bumped its head instead of brushing it; she is grateful because it was bright and sunny on washday; she is grateful when her children scream and howl that they have the strength to do it; she is an optimist every minute of the day because she has to be; she is even grateful that her husband isn't meaner than he is.

He sits in an office near an electric fan; there is no electric fan turned on her treadling bowel. He has the most modern tooth-inventive wisdom has produced for making work lighter. She has none, but if he did the housework he would buy a machine to spread molasses on the children's bread.

Liberty is always pictured as a woman, but every married woman knows that the woman who pose for Liberty wears no wedding ring. When she is scolded at night for the best she could do all day, she is satisfied that the lady on the silver dollar doesn't represent a married woman. When she is scolded in the morning because the baby was restless in the night, she knows that the woman who was the model for the Statue of Liberty looks the part because she is single. The wife of the man who scolds resurrected herself in hard labor and ill-usage for life the day she married, and hasn't more liberty than a chicken in a grocer's coop.

She is the underpaid slave of "the man who scolds mother;" she is giving her life and the best that goes with it to a man whose only distinction, if he were compelled to show some claim to recognition, is that he has never been tattooed.

She is the burden bearer for a man so small, so weak and so contemptible that he can't bear in patience his little annoyances, but makes big ones of them and dumps them on the mother of his children.

"The man who scolds mother" describes more men than the world will ever know.

His Object

A LITTLE lad was very ill, and his companions living in the same street had been asked not to make any noise. The invalid's mother received a visit from one of these lads.

"How is he to-day?" he inquired in a shy whisper.

"He's better, thank you, my dear. What a thoughtful child you are to come and ask!"

The boy stood for a moment.

"I'm orful sorry Jimmy's ill."

The mother was profoundly touched but could find no further words to say, but simply kissed him. Made still bolder by the caress, the youthful caller began to back down the steps, repeating at intervals his sorrow for his playmate's illness. At the bottom step he halted and looked up.

"If Jimmy should die," he asked, "his I have his drum?"

A Thrilling Story of Wireless and War

"THEN we are acting together," she murmured, slowly, still a little mystified, still a little sceptical as to this new issue which was resulting from.

"Yes, we're acting together—and we'll never let Ganley win!" said McKinnon.

It was something more than the fire of foolish ardour. And the woman at his side must have seen and known. It for a touch of color came into her pale cheeks. The electric fan purred and hummed on its little bracket. The soft and balmy night air beat on their faces. The saloon and quiet-ness of the ship was about them.

"Won't you let me fight this fight out, for you?" he asked, surrendering to the tide of feeling that seemed tearing him from all his old anchorages.

"If we only could!" she said, inadequately.

"We can, together," he cried, with blind and unreasoning hope, resenting the look of something that seemed strangely akin to pity as she gazed up at him.

She did not answer, in words, but some slowly transforming emotion, some inner and unuttered capitulation slowly overborne the look of trouble that weighed upon her. Then she closed her eyes, as though shutting out some glimpse of happiness too great to be anything but a mockery. Before she opened them McKinnon had her hand between his great bony fingers, and reckless fire and warmth and daring were surging through his veins.

"I'm going to fight this out for you," he said, "and I'm going to win because you want me to win!"

"Oh, it will be hard;" she murmured, with a vibrant of something that was almost happiness in her voice.

"Hard!" he agreed, in his new-born and unreasoning audacity; "I'd dight through Hell itself for you!"

Ganley Disturbed

Ganley, togged out in a loose-fitting and many-wrinkled suit of white duck, was pacing the Leuinlan's bridge-deck, like a polar bear pacing its cage.

He watched the unfolding sun grow bright and brazen, like a newly minted penny. He watched the aerials bridging the mastheads and waiting like a noose to net any wandering school of smoke-mullet. He watched the barefooted sailors slosh the steaming deck-boards. But most of all he watched the skyline ahead, with many ruminative uplifts of his heavy iron-grey eyebrows.

It startled him a little to see McKinnon emerge from the deck below, fresh from his early bath in a rusty iron tub that had long since parted with its porcelain, whistling like a sand-boy as he climbed the brass-plated stairs.

He emerged from the stair-head in a suit of fresh linen, clean and cool-looking, as chirps as a city sparrow at a fountain-rim. It even disturbed Ganley a little to behold him so causelessly and so mysteriously happy.

But what more seriously disturbed the guardedly watching man was the trivial discovery that McKinnon took a key from his pocket, as he approached his station door, that he fitted it in the lock and turned it before he gained admittance to his narrow operating quarters. It obviously meant that for some reason or other, the wireless room was thereafter to be kept under lock and key.

McKinnon himself knew there were more reasons than one for that early morning mood of his. It was not the mere thought that he could now claim a definite and demonstrable ally which brought his lightheartedness back to him.

It was more the concolousness of that new camaraderie which must exist between him and Alicia Boynton, the promise of close and subtle companionship with a young and lovely woman whose interests were to be his interests. It was the realization that at last duty and desire had been made one.

He felt something wordlessly consoling in the fact that as the long tropical morning wore away he could look up from his operating table and see, out of the corner of his eye, the white-clad figure of the girl, not a stone's throw away from him. It was understood that they were not to meet openly.

Ganley saw as he looked out at her from time to time, and saw her lying idly back under the patched awnings of the bridge, apparently engrossed in a book, that she was quietly co-operating with him in keeping a watch of their common enemy.

Face Troubled

The first fruits of this quiet espionage was the disturbing sight of Ganley making his way to Captain Yandel's stateroom.

What took place there it was impossible to tell. All Alicia could be sure of was that the wireless man left his cabin with the ship's master. For the past few days, she suspected, this bull-necked and bullock-minded officer had been more than ever on the ship's supply of liquor.

Alcohol, apparently, only served to crown his factionally with an unusual-like ferocousness, when interfered with or even accosted. That strait and friendless man, she knew, was not one to be easily won over.

He had neither the brains nor the subtlety to corrupt the even tenor of his own like days by anything so disquieting as a revolution-maker. He was not, open to a gun-runner's appeals, or he would surely have played his hand earlier in the game.

Yet there was something horribly to her in the mere fact that Ganley could remain closeted with that autocratic functionary for so long, whether the time was being spent in bribe-passing or in imbibing aguardiente flavored with Jamaica rum and dried mint-leaves.

Her fear fell away from her, however, when she saw Ganley come out of the stateroom door again. His face was dark and troubled, but to the guardedly watching woman his tread seemed heavy and spiritless.

She calculated the episode to McKinnon an hour later, when he casually strolled below and slipped unobserved into her cabin as they had arranged.

"I don't think even Ganley could plausibly accuse me of smuggling arms in a bass like Vandel," explained the operator. "It would be like trying to wheedle yourself into the good graces of a grizzly. And he's been drinking—drinking absolutely. It would be worse than trying to get a bee interested. He knows how to navigate a ship, and that is all.

"But if Ganley should put the whole case before him and make the crew sufficiently big ones. Suppose he waits until the last, and then simply buys him over?"

Not the Buyable Kind

McKinnon shook his head.

"He's not the buyable kind, or he would have been bought before. And then he's against everything he stands for by fight and friction and opposition."

"But think of his power!"

"I don't think he can, when we remember he's nothing but a whiskey-lapping and saltcrusting inhabitant."

"I wouldn't be too bought over. If the bribe were made big enough? As big as Ganley could afford to make it?"

"I don't pretend to knowledge as to what a man will or will not do when tempted enough," answered McKinnon, as he eyed his absent and studious eyes on the troubled woman. But considering Ganley lively tells me Capt. Yandel is not going to be our danger point. He was silent for a moment or two, for his reaction had set his eye-active mind off on a new tangent.

"I must be the one to temporize with him and keep him guessing until it's too late!"

"But it would only make things worse, in the end."

"Could they be any worse?"

"Perhaps not, but can you expect treachery to trust you now?"

"I don't think he quite understands, yet. And I'll go to him and give him back his revolver. It's no use to me—and I've no friend he carries a second gun."

"But you yourself?" interposed his companion. McKinnon touched his pocket.

Always a Chance

"I've had to carry this, now and then, even when there was no trouble. And one can't lose anything by keeping in touch with him. And there's always the chance of my wireless picking up something."

"Suppose Captain Yandel has designs to him of the scene in your room?" asked the girl, apparently disturbed by some new possibility.

"Which scene?"

"When you told him I was your fiancé," she explained, with heightened color.

Married Life the Second Year

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

In Which Helen Spends an Anxious Night Alone in the Hotel

HELEN went into the sitting room and sat down before one of the desks.

She took a sheet of hotel paper from the rack before her, and selected the head rests of the pens.

Mechanically she wrote the date—August —, 1911—on the dotted line underlining, exaggerated picture of the hotel. But her letter writing went no further. Instead she drew aimless figures on the blotter, while she laid an anxious game on the lobby outside.

By the big clock over the room clerk's desk it was a quarter of eight. And Warren had not come. And he had promised not over her any message.

In the two weeks they had been at the seashore he had never before been later than seven. And now she had been waiting on the veranda for him until everybody had gone into dinner.

"Hasn't Mr. Curtis come yet?" Mrs. Stevens had asked solicitously as she passed.

"No, but I'm sure he'll be out on the next train," answered Helen, trying to comfort her anxiety.

But the next train had not brought him and feeling as conspicuous on the deserted veranda she had sought refuge in the writing room.

From the dining room at the end of the corridor came the mingled noises of a big restaurant—the hurry of waiters, clatter of dishes and the low buzz of many voices.

Even had Helen not shrunk from going in to dinner alone, she knew she could eat nothing.

Helen Worries

What could have happened that he been detained at the office nearly he could have telephoned.

An accident? She tried resolutely to put that thought from her. And yet, at the minute hand of the big clock over the room clerk's desk moved on she could think of nothing else.

"Oh, haven't you been in to dinner?" asked Mrs. Stevens, as she and her husband came out of the dining room.

"No—I thought I'd wait for Mr. Curtis."

Hasn't telephoned or sent you any word?"

Helen shook her head.

"And of course you don't know where to telephone?"

"No; there would be no one in the office now, and I wouldn't know where else to telephone."

"Well, if he doesn't come soon," said Mr. Stevens, "and if I can be of any service—"

Oh, thank you, murmured Helen "but I'm sure he'll be here in a few moments now."

Although Mrs. Stevens urged her to come out with them on the veranda, Helen now went upstairs. She wanted to escape their questions and sympathetic interest.

It was not a very new or modernly appointed hotel, and there were no telephones in the rooms. So she put off word at the office that should any message come she would be in her room.

It was a typical summer hotel room—scantily and cheaply furnished. Were it not for their trunks and handbags it would have seemed more barren still.

Helen walked aimlessly about, going first to one window and then to the other. Every few minutes she would open the door to look down the hall, but only to see an occasional bell boy with the inevitable pitcher of ice water, or perhaps a white-aproned maid with her tingling keys.

She Is Disconsolate

Once she left her door open and walked the long length of the hall, past the red light which is the escape sign, to the window at the far end. It overlooked the side of the house, but by leaning out she could get a glimpse of the beach and the ocean.

How black the water was! There was no moon and only the distant lightning flashed soft rose and violet. Below rained away with a rumble. That dark stretch of sea seemed only to accentuate her fears.

What could have happened? For the hundredth time she asked herself that. And what could she do? How much longer should she wait?

Again she went down to the office. By the time over the desk it was now nearly half past eight.

Her room held a message no more than the first.

The only sounds in the house were the snoring of the fat room clerk and the distant rumble of the dishes in the dining room.

Once more she went back to her room. What should she do? Everything she walked in and out from one window to the other and out into the hall again. A coffee-stained, dog-eared magazine that some one of the doors reminded her that she had had no dinner. But she knew she could not eat. Still she could not wait much longer without midnight. And if by that time he had not come or sent word—what then? Should she go to the stevens. She would ask them what to do.

Visions of search parties, of detectives, of the police, of the morning papers filled the people of strange disappearances, flashed through Helen's brain. Every one of the papers had been full of the unaccountable disappearance of middle-aged men. He had left home in the accustomed way. He had arrived. And he could have had no possible reason for leaving. Robbery or sudden loss of memory were the only solutions.

Helen was in the midst of a shudder when a knock came on her door.

"Mr. Curtis has come, ma'am."

She rushed ahead of the bell boy, down the long hall, and down the stairs to the lobby beside.

With some one to say he was hurt—or worse. She could hardly hold the reveiw.

Helen! Helen!

Down came her pretty, shrilled call.

Oh I say, Helen, I can't get out to-night. Don't wait dinner for me. Am all right and you're rung me into it. I just had time to get word to you.

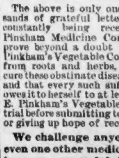
Hurt me? Not a bit. Only the wonder came with an explanation that I didn't have time for. I did try about 7, but couldn't get the hotel. Line busy. And hadn't a chance since. Am very much vexed. Sorry.

Love, Jack.

P. S. I'll sleep here at the office, as I could not be sure to morrow that I'd get back in time to catch it. If I can't I'll wire.

SHE HAD CONSTANT PAIN

Until Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.



Dewittville, N.Y. — "Before I started to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I suffered nearly all the time with headaches, backaches, and bearing down pains, and had a continuous pain in my left side. It made me sick if I tried to walk much, and my back was so weak that I was obliged to wear corsets all the time. But now I do not have any of these troubles. I have a fine strong baby daughter now, which I did not have before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. A. A. Gillis, Route 44, Dewittville, N. Y.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters that are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company, which proves beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

We challenge anyone to name even one other medicine that has been so successful in relieving woman's suffering as has Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

BREAKING APPOINTMENTS

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am nineteen and deeply in love with a young man of the same age.

I kept company with him three months during which time I did not care much for him, and on one occasion failed to meet him. He has as a result, failed to make any more appointments with me.

Since that time I have learned to love him and would like to know in what way I could regain his friendship without having him know of my love. Your advice will be appreciated. PUZZLED.

P. S.—He has moved, and, not having his new address, I have been unable to write.

HAVE you no mutual friends to whom you could explain the mistake you made?

Unless he still likes you and regrets lack of his own accord, there is little you can do. This will make you realize that it is better not to make any appointments whatsoever if you do not intend keeping them.

SHE IS RIGHT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am nineteen, and have been keeping company for the last year with a young woman one year my junior.

She has repeatedly said she loved me, but I have seen her several times lately with another young man who has been paying her a great deal of attention. I have refused to her, but she replied she would think it over.

A S. I.

THE young girl is right in saying she wishes to think it over before deciding to marry you.

She is still very young, and if you truly love her you will not want to see her take a step which she might soon regret, and which might eventually spoil the happiness of you both.

Let her have plenty of time to consider, and do not worry too much if she appears interested in other young men, for if it is you she really loves, knowing you will only make her realize it.

I do not mean for you to sit back and do nothing, for "faint heart never won fair lady," but do not be too exacting with her. If she loves you it will all come out right in the end.

HE EXPECTS TOO MUCH

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have a dear girl friend who is in love with a young gentleman. She has given me a few of his company a number of times.

Recently he told her that she should not accept the attentions of any of the men in our church. He wishes her to go out in public only in his company.

She has repeatedly said she loved me, but I have seen her several times lately with another young man who were in love with him she would have no other desire than to be with him always.

Your friendship with her, perhaps, has caused him to be jealous.

HE WILL TAKE FIRST STEP

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

About two months ago I became acquainted with a young man whom I would prefer for a husband to any one else.

Suddenly he became very cool and practically deserted me. Now he has found a friend he would like to renew the acquaintance. I have met many young men since, but none that I liked as I did him. And I still like him.

As I am very proud but would like to meet him again, what do you think that I should do? Please advise me how I might go about it.

INDECIDED.

HE will know that you still like him and you might wait patiently until he takes the first step.

If you are friendly and put aside all petty feelings you have nothing to fear. Accept his friendship when he offers it, if you no decline, but do not be too anxious or appear forward in any way.

Be very careful your position is rather delicate. Be guided by it always and respond.

Give sparingly of your devotion and do nothing that will, of course you regret in the future.

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS; FINANCIAL NEWS MARVELS SEEN AT MARSHFIELD

SHARP DECLINE FELT IN STOCKS

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—There were sharp declines in the railroad group following a weak opening of the stock market to-day. Pressure upon Harriman issues caused them to sell off with losses in the first transactions. Union Pacific, after opening 8 lower, sold down a full point. Southern Pacific declined to 104¾, or 1¼ below last night's close.

United States Steel opened with a loss of ⅝, while many unprofitable accounts were by selling until the decline was a couple of points. At the end of fifteen minutes the following lower prices were established through out the list:

Point losses were scored in Northern Pacific, Reading, Canadian Pacific, Southern Railway and others.

The copper group acted in sympathy. Amalgamated opened ¼ off and American Smelting ⅛ off.

Despite the assertion of Judge Lovett of the Harriman lines that "conditions within the factory" was responsible for much unsatisfactory business, reports continued to be circulated relative to plans of trunk lines and big corporations.

The earnings report appears this week on Standard Oil and American Tobacco.

Trading in London was narrow and professional. Canadian Pacific was heavy in Liverpool.

Selling in Liverpool the weather condition caused a decline of from ¼ to 1 points in the cotton market to-day. The opening price was exceeded upon strength in early cable advices from Texas that rainy weather prevailed there over the belt. Later offers and mid-day reports offered little support.

Cotton opening: August 12.36, October 11.25, December 11.34, January 11.40, March 11.51, May 11.58.

Notes for Investors

Controlling interests in the stock market are willing, perhaps, to see a lower level than that now prevailing for a time. There is nothing in the way of demoralization. Money is too plentiful to look for anything in the way of a smash-up.

In its present position the market has been oversold. There are reports, well authenticated, that some large blocks of stock have been taken over by strong people from below not so well able to take care of it, and this has led to the belief that many of the "sold" spots which have been pounded dangerous have been filled up.

Those who are looking for a wholesale slaughter of securities in little time will have their hopes upon. No one will be foolish enough to deny that it may be necessary to bring about a readjustment of prices, but natural and legitimate conditions call for nothing more than this.

The rumor that the Pennsylvania Railroad would lay off a large number of men was denied officially. The persistent calculation of false reports is accepted by some brokers as an indication that the selling now going on is of a different character from that which caused the current smash, and represents the operations of bear traders.

Although orders for finished steel products so far this week show no improvement over last week, steel men are confident that bookings in September will be much heavier. The Steel Trust is operating at a similar percentage this week. The new business received by the United States Steel Corporation in August is not quite as heavy as that in July.

Baltimore & Ohio is the first of the important railroad systems to make a monthly report of month earnings, and if, as many believe, the figures will be typical, they furnish an accurate indication of the volume of business carried by other roads operating in practically the same territory. Eastern trunk lines had a very successful month in July.

Bull reports are beginning to quietly circulate on Reading. It is intimated that there has been some liquidation by other operating on the drives, and that large supporting orders appear under the market at the recent lows. As yet the stock remains in a trading area, but it is thought it may be out of it within a comparatively short time.

It is stock market history that when shocks are thrown over regardless of values that the man with money and nerve gets bargains. The Boston copper share list offers many bargains at going prices.

Congress Goes Home

The Extra Session Shows the Democratic Party Presenting a United and Conquering Front

Congress has adjourned. Its ending marked a new chapter in the parliamentary history of the United States—a chapter that cuts the thread of old traditions and opens new vistas.

The net result of the extra session of Congress that has just come to an end is a shifting of the status of the two great parties in the field of national politics. The Democrats have become the party of harmonious counsels and effectual action, and the Republicans have been remanded to the role of obstruction and division played for so many years by their opponents.

The erroneous impression had gone abroad that there was something in the nature of Democratic principles that precluded unity of action and the steadfast following of a constructive program. But this false impression has now been completely obliterated. Under the able leadership of Champ Clark and Oscar W. Underwood the National Democracy has destroyed the legend of its impotence and distraction. It has mobilized and marshalled its forces for great adventures.

Not in sixty years has the Democratic party presented so united and conquering a front as it does to-day. Its executive efficiency in the House of Representatives has been an inspiring spectacle in the whole length and breadth of the picture.

In particular, its clearness and singleness of mind on the tariff question—the question that has hitherto been the storm centre of all the confused currents and cross-purposes of party politics—has shown like a miracle of political regeneration.

With supra-partisan magnanimity—braced perhaps with the memory that it was a Democratic administration that established in 1854 the first reciprocity agreement—the Democrats in both houses of Congress have come to the rescue of a Republican President in the great cause of the Canadian pact.

Not the House, but the President has "played politics." In the vain hope of putting his opponents "in a hole," Mr. Taft vetoed the Farmers' Free List and the Wool and Cotton bills. The public hurt entailed by these vetoes is strikingly illustrated by the news, published on the day of the Cotton bill veto—that important New England cotton mills are shutting down, to wait for lower raw-cotton prices and consequent higher profits. This is done in spite of the fact that the tariff has boosted the prices of cotton products so high that the people of the United States have been living this year on a half-normal allowance of underclothes.

By his veto of the original Statehood bill, the President has not indeed greatly delayed the admission of the territories. But he has blurred for a moment the brightness of one of the forty-eight stars of our completed continental Union. Arizona comes through the gate with its brave arm in a sling—maimed in one of the powers that belong by primary right to all free States, the right of the people to withdraw, as well as to bestow, their commissions of official trust and honor.

The wound will heal. The State of Arizona will not submit to be permanently crippled by Presidential duress. It will act as other States act. It will hold itself free to believe that the people are good judges of bad judges, and can recall them if necessary.

Does Some Dog Play With Your Child and Lick Its Face?

Read This

(Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal-Examiner.)

With all sympathy for those that love dogs—faithful animals, emblematic of friendship, but out of place in our civilization and oursed with a fearful disease—we propose to keep in the public mind the real character of dogs and what they mean.

The usual dog story of the day is not lacking. Another bulldog knocked down a small child, tore its face and arms, and the child's life is in danger—the regulation daily story.

You may say, "My dog would never do such a thing as that." Perhaps he would not; perhaps he would. But your dog might do THIS:

Pet Dog Licks Hand and He Dies of Hydrophobia

Former Racing Chauffeur for W. K. Vanderbilt Was Inoculated Through a Tiny Scratch.

Jacob Schwenzer, president of the Woodbridge Auto Repair and Supply Company, and formerly a racing chauffeur for W. K. Vanderbilt, died Tuesday night at his home in Woodbridge, N. J., of hydrophobia, contracted when a pet dog licked his hand. The patient was not told what his disease was, and died thinking he had pneumonia.

Schwenzer's dog was sick when he petted him on July 3. There was a scratch on his hand when the dog licked it, but Schwenzer thought nothing of it.

Two days later the dog suddenly developed hydrophobia and bit Mrs. Schwenzer. The dog was killed and the head sent to the State Laboratory of Hygiene at Trenton. The first examination did not reveal the presence of hydrophobia, but another animal was inoculated with the fluid from the dead dog's brain, and in two weeks the animal was dead.

Mrs. Schwenzer at once took the Pasteur treatment. The Schwenzer children had played with the dog just before it bit their mother, and it is known that the animal licked their face, too. Mrs. Schwenzer, mother of the dead man, is also taking the Pasteur treatment with the children, for the dog licked her hand on the same day that her son was inoculated with the disease.

That is the story of one dog, kind and gentle, not MEANING to hurt anybody. And it may be the story of your dog and of your child to-morrow.

If your dog contracts rabies, that is not his fault. But it is your fault to run such a risk.

If you permit your young child to play with a dog that licks the child's face, the probability of a fatal result, as told in the case of Jacob Schwenzer, is undoubtedly slight.

But the probability of extremely harmful results in very great.

Dogs frequent filth of all kinds—and your dog is no cleaner than any other. Let him go near the carcass of any dead animal, reeking with disease germs, and he will roll in it in ecstasy. Every walk he takes abroad is a search for filth of some kind. You know that, for you see it.

How is it possible for a sane man to permit a young child to play with such an animal and have its face licked by a creature which through no fault of its own, but through the power of its instinct, seeks decay and filth everywhere?

If the ancient Indian, who wanted to take his dog to Heaven, is strong in you—if you must have a dog around you—keep your young child away from it, at least.

The West End Stockholders Again

The open letter of Mr. Baldwin to Governor Foss, defending the opposition of the protective committee of the West End stockholders to the consolidation of the West End with the Elevated without an increase to their dividends, emphasizes two important facts. It shows how much more injurious to the public interests a poor commission can be than no commission at all, and it shows how weak is the case of those West End stockholders who oppose the consolidation of the two street railways.

Mr. Baldwin frankly rests the case of his committee upon their demand for an increase of dividends, and he rests the propriety of that demand upon this year's report of the Joint Board of Railroad and Rapid Transit Commissioners.

To set up an opposition to the public interests in the face of public opinion as expressed by all the regular organs of public expression in Boston, the Governor, the Legislature, the Chamber of Commerce, the Public Franchise League and all the influential papers and most of the leading public-spirited citizens, is bad enough, but to justify so much audacity and immodesty by the last report of the Joint Board is worst of all.

The Joint Board never justified an increase upon any ground of morals or principle, nor did the best men on the board, Chairman Hall of the Railroad Commission and Chairman Crocker of the Rapid Transit Commission, ever justify the demand for an increase upon any ground whatever.

A majority of the board said that if the West End stockholders refused their assent to a consolidation, then it was justifiable to grant them an increase of dividends as a matter of bargaining and trading. They distinctly asserted, however, that such an increase was not a question of morals or principle. But the minority, composed of the two chairmen, held that such an increase was not justifiable under any circumstances.

The year before, when the question was considered upon its merits, the Joint Board unanimously held that the West End stockholders were receiving now an amply sufficient return. We quote from last year's unanimous report of the Joint Board, and if those West End stockholders who demand an increase of dividends think they can find comfort there, then they are welcome to hug their delusion.

"The terms of the consolidation should be such as are just to each of the parties. No undue advantage should be granted to either of them. This Joint Board considers that the rate of dividend (seven per cent.) on the second preferred stock, as named in the act, is not unjust to the West End Street Railway stockholders, but on the contrary is amply liberal."

The miserable quibble and shuffle of the weaker members of the Joint Board this year on alleged principles of trading is a poor defence for the Protective Committee.

A FEEBLE thing of wood and canvas wrought,
The "prairie schooner" crossed the burning plain,
The home and hope of daring souls who fought
And won, or died, as did their Fates ordain.

Rough fellows, in their clattering caravans,
Moving through perils that they could not guess,
They made the virgin realm of nature man's,
And carried light into the wilderness.

A feeble thing of wood and canvas made,
The "airy schooner" skims the clouds to-day,
Through wind and rain her pilot, unafraid,
Steers over skyey plains his wondrous way.

He comes! the firmament's young pioneer,
Eastward, whereas his father westward rode.
He comes! His sail is sighted! He is here!
Marking an epoch in an episode.

He Writes About Pa and His Hen

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

WEN Pa cain hoam last nite thare was sumthing under his coat that kept saying all the time Cluck Cluck.

For herings sake, sed Ma, what have you thare?

Jest a hen, sed Pa, it is only a poor, inoffensive hen. Don't look at it savage, sed Pa, it never done nothing.

What in the wurld do you mean by bringing a hen here to our flat? sed Ma. Whare do you think you are, sumwere in the wilds?

Pa looked kind of ashamed & red in the face.

I asked you a questun, sed Ma. Why did you bring hoam a hen? Of all the foolish things wich you have did since we was married, Ma sed, I think this is the wurst. Answer my questun.

It is a nice hen, sed Pa, it won't bite anybody, besides, I thought maybe after a while I cud buy sum more & we cud have sum littel chickens later on. There is nothing in the world cuter than a littel chicken, sed Pa.

I hoap you doant think you are going in for chicken raising in a apartment, sed Ma.

Lots of grate men has raised chickens, sed Pa. Bismarck used to raise them by the hundred. Pa sed, & Julius Ceesar & Hans Wagner & Sailor Burke. Honest labor isn't anything for to be ashamed of, Pa sed.

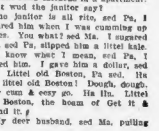
Take that hen back whare you got it, sed Ma. Ma was trying hard not to laff, I cud see that. Pa was hoalding the hen by one leg & it was geting hard to stand steddy on his two legs, & the hen was squwaking very hard. Return that hen to its riteful owner, sed Ma.

Littlest steal it, sed Pa. I am its lawful owner. I bought it from that Dutch butcher down on Washington St. You know the one I mean, Pa sed, the one that we doant owe any munny to.

But you know as well as you are trying to stand thare, sed Ma, that we cant raise chickens in a apartment. What wud the janitor say?

The janitor is all rite, sed Pa, I sugared him when I was cumming up stairs. You what? sed Ma. I sugared him, sed Pa, slipped him a littel kale. You know what I mean, sed Pa, I bribed him. I gave him a dollar, sed Pa. Littel old Boston, Pa sed. Its Ha, littel old Boston! Dough, dough, easy cum & easy go. Ha Ha. Littel old Boston, the boum of Get it & Spend it.

My deer husband, sed Ma, pulling



Pa over into a chair kind of gentel, by his ear, my deer husband, as soon as you have put the hen to bed I want you to give a faithful account of yurself & ware you was this afternoon.

I met a old friend of mine from Wisconsin, sed Pa. I might have brought him up to the house, but he had three hens with him that he bought from the sams butcher, & he sed he must hurry rite hoam to his hotel & give them to his wife. Like most Wisconsin men, sed Pa, he is a devoted husband.

Bobby, Ma sed, go in & git a nice cold towel & we shall put it on the noble brow of our honored and father, Ma sed, & tell the hen down stairs, sed Ma, & give it to the janitor.
